Police seek killer with a grudge linked to television programme

Jill Dando died from bullet in the head

By Adrian Lee. Michael Harvey and Dominic Kennedy

POLICE hunting the killer of the tele-vision presenter Jill Dando were last night examining hundreds of cases she dealt with on Crimewatch UK in the belief that she was murdered by someone with a grudge against the

Miss Dando, who was 38, was shot dead in broad daylight on the door-step of her £400,000 terrace home in Fulham, west London, at about 11.30 yesterday morning. Police said last night that she had suffered a single gunshot wound to her head.

Her next-door neighbour Richard Hughes, a financial trader, said he heard her car returning home, the blip of its alarm activating and, 40 seconds later, a scream. "It was more of a surprise scream as if she had turned round and seen somebody."

He then watched as a well-dressed man in his 30s walked calmly away from the scene io the direction of the River Thames. The man was white, clean shaven and well-groomed and was carrying a mobile phone. "He was as cool as a cucumber. I thought it could have been a friend," Mr

Hugher said. By the ome he and two other neighhours reached Miss Dando she was unconscious in the doorway of her three-bedroom house on Gowan Avenue. The door was closed and it looked as if she had slumped against

"There was blood everywhere. She did not appear to be breathing," Mr Hughes added. "There was blood coming from what appeared to be a wound behind her ear and running down her neck."

Two paramedic teams and a helicopter crew were sent to the scene, They found her suffering from serious head injuries and spent several minutes trying to save her life there. She was then taken to Charing Cross Hospital, three minutes away, where she was certified dead at 1.03pm.

Her fiance Alan Farthing was called from his gynaecology clinic at St Mary's Hospital, Paddington, to be asked to identify the body.

Two others who went to her aid had been involved in a coffee morning just down the street for young mothers with toddlers. Charlotte de Rosney said a friend arrived at her home and told them she had seen a woman slumped in the doorway of number 29. Two of the women quickly went to the scene and called an am-bulance. They described Miss Dando as looking blue and lifeless. "They said she was ashen, they didn't come back for 45 minutes and that's when I knew it must be serious," Ms de Rosney said. "I am just so shocked and I feel edgy now. Jill Dando was just very pleasant to everybody."

Miss Dando's death brought tributes from the Queen, the Prime Minister, celebrities and colleagues. Within hours, hundreds of viewers had signed an on-line book of remembrance. The Queen said that she was shocked and saddened by the murder and Tony Blair, who was told of the killing while preparing his Commons statement on the Nato summit, paid tribute to a "hugely talented" public figure. Last year it was reported that an admirer put a note through Miss Dando's front door after she was pictured in a magazine with Mr Farthing, a consultant gynaecologist whom she met on a blind date. They were planning to marry in September. John Hole, a 62-year-old bachelor, admitted that he had been accused of harassing Miss Dando, but said it was a "bit unfair". He had sent Valentine cards and waited for her outside the BBC studios, but had stopped contacting her after seeing the photograph. The BBC director of television Alan Yentob said he bad been informed about her security concerns. "Of course we were concerned about her safety. We did hear the story about the stalker. We live in that kind of dangerous and unpredictable world. She was a professional broadcaster and she had to get on with it. clearly this left her exposed as well." An emotional Nick Ross, who presented Crimewatch UK with her. said: The paradox is that we used to say on Crimewatch that a crime like this is very rare. In fact, maybe it's not a paradox - it's hit us like lightning, like a bolt out of the blue, it's asionishing, it really is astonishing. She was irritated from time to time, there had been somebody stalking her, but to be honest that really goes with the turf and I don't think there has been a time, certainly that she ever confided in me, where anything untoward like this or even remotely like this seems

Detectives said that they would be looking at the hundreds of cases Miss Dando dealt with on the programme in case someone with a grudge was responsible for the killing. Last night her brother, Nigel Dando, said the family had last met over the Easter weekend when she brought Dr Farthing to discuss details for their summer wedding. "Jill was so looking forward to that and was on top form. She was a devoted daughter and a loving sister and we shall miss her. People who knew her through her television work will miss her. Her roots were soll in Weston. She did charity work there and still loved it here." Her 81-year-old father, Jack, was too upset to say anything.

Miss Dando had intended to slow

By Susan Emmett

MORE than three million members of Bradford & Bingley Building Society are set to receive a windfall of up to E1,000 each after members voted in favour of the society's conversion to a bank. The result represents a re sounding defeat for the board, which ran a £5 million campaign against conversion. A majority of 62 per cent voted in favour of abandoning the society's mutual status to become a bank with a stock market listing.

But savers and borrowers will have to wait at least another year before receiving their windfalls. The decision by Bradford & Bingley members is likely to spark a new round of so-called carpetbagging by speculators seeking to open accounts at other mutual building societies that might float on the stock market.

George Robertson, the Defence Secretary, said that President Milosevic's regime was beginning to crack under the united pressure of the alliance and that an interview given by Vuk Draskovic "blew a hole in the facade of Belgrade unity".

Mr Draskovic, who has a reputacion as a maverick, told the local Studio B television: "People who lead this country must say clearly where we stand. They must say what will be left of Serbia in 20 days if the bombing cononues.

The people should be told that Nato is not facing a break-down, that Russia will not help Yugoslavia militarily and that the world's public opinion

THE Prime Minister led tributes to Jili Dando by colleagues, celebrities and politicians. Tony Blair was told of her murder as he prepared his Commons statement on the

A spokesman for Mr Blair said: "He was deeply shocked. He had met her both professionally and socially at Downing Street and, in common with many people, he found her totally charming and highly talented. He thinks it appalling that anybody could do such a thing."

Her killing was raised in the Commons by Sir Norman Fowler, the Shadow Home Secretary. He said: "On behalf of the Opposition, can I say that we have all been appalled to hear the news of the murder of Jill Dando?"

MPs murmured agreement as he continued: "She was someone I knew and admired and she did a vast amount to combat crime, there is no quesoon of that, it's an horrific murder and a terrible loss."

The Home Secretary, Jack Straw, said: "May I associate myself and the Government with your remarks? Jill Dando was someone who was known to virtually everybody in this country, if not personally. She was someone who was at the height of her powers.

She had done a huge amount personally in the fight against crime by her role not least in Crimewatch UK, and therefore this makes her death all the more poignant.

'Girl next door with gravitas' was perfect presenter Presenter was the embodiment of polite middle England, reports Carol Midgley tN Jill Dando, the BBC had found the prototype of its near-perfect television presenter.

Attractive but not intimidatingly beautiful, well-spoken hut not "snooty", friendly but with a calm air of authority, she was the very embodiment of polite Middle England. Viewers warmed to her be-cause she had no airs and graces. BBC executives valued her because she was so adaptable.

Few presenters could combine presenting programmes as disparate as Holiday, Crimewatch and the Six O'Clock News, and appear naturally suited to all of them. Her shows had consistently good ratings. Jill Dando personified the special ingredient which BBC policymakers covet presenters with the ability to retain gravitas while coming over to the viewer as the girl next door.

It is part of the BBC's stated policy, after months of audience research, to secure more personalities from just her mould. However, if there was a flaw in Miss Dando's make-up, it was that some considered her association with a holiday programme made her too "showfiness" to be a full-time newsread-

It was this which cost her the job earlier this year as chief anchor for the new Six O'Clock News, to be relaunched next month.

Some BBC executives thought she was the perfect face to draw a wider audience to serious news and current affairs. Others. however, argued that she was too lightweight and would not create the right impressioo for its key news programme.

As the debate was raging in the press. Dando, with typical serenity, announced that she did not wish her future career to be the subject of BBC leaks and gossip and withdrew her name from the running. Instead, she signed up for a number of new projects with BBC! controller, Peter Salmon, that were still being discussed. The Six O'Clock News job went to Huw Ed-spondent for the BBC. "Jill was quintessentially BBC. She had a very British, very reassuring television presence," said a col-league. "She was a dream to work with. A lot of people in her position can behave like real prima donnas about things, but she was always very down to earth."

wards, a former political corre-

Some described Miss Dando as hland because of her clean-cut image. But televisioo executives believed the fact that she did not have an overbearing personality was one of the things viewers tiked best.

There are few women broadcasters around who can claim blonde appeal without thelabel of "bimbo". As the BBC will find, no doubt, when it tries to replace her.

Stalker tells of his shock at 'great loss'

BY ADAM SHERWIN

THE man who stalked Jill Dando for four years expressed shock at her murder. John Hole, a retired civil servant in his 60s, from Kent, admitted bombarding the presenter with telephone calls and visits to her home on several occasions.

Speaking outside his home Mr Hole said: "I am shocked to hear the circumstances surrounding her death. I can't understand why anyone would want to display violence towards this woman. I think it was a great loss."

Mr Hole said the first he heard of the murder was when a reporter called his home. Mr Hole said: "Someone called, but I thought it was a try-on. I am very sorry it happened. I know no more than that. I want to be left alone. She was a marvellous presenter, very good at her job."

Mr Hole said he had not bothered Miss Dando for more than a year. He said: "As far as I'm concerned, my involvement with Jill Dando was over when an article was published last year about her new romance. I haven't spoken to her since then."

Mr Hole has said of his targeting of Miss Dando: "t have never made any death threats. I've never threatened her with violence.

During the four years he spent harassing Miss Dando, he admitted waiting outside her home and the BBC studios. He said: "I found out by perfectly legal means where she lived and knocked on the Mr Hole, who is not mar-

Unfortunately for Jill, she fell within my sights."

Miss Dando played down the harassment, but asked BBC officials to warn Mr Hole to cease his attentions. Mr Hole said he had complied. He said: "I have got to stop what I'm doing or face the

Tough laws try to curb threat to women

JILL DANDO was yet another celebrity victim of the attentions of a stalker. Obsessive stalking is increasingly part of the cost of fame.

Members of the Royal Family, notably the Princess Royal and Diana, Princess of Wales, have been victims. So, too, has the singer Madonna, the actress Kate Winslett and the TV weatherman Bill Giles.

Bot it was the trauma suffered by women far from the public eye that forced Parliament to introduce an anti-stalking law two years ago.

The move reflected the changing perception of stalking as women's groups and the charity Victim Support pressed MPs to recognise it as a serious threat. The case of Tracy

Sant, who was subjected lo a three-year campaign of terror during which her stalker repeatedly broke injunctions and bail conditions not to approach her, showed how existing legislatioo had let them down.

Her stalker, Anthony Burstow, was jailed for three years in 1996 after he became the first stalker to be convicted of assault occasioning grievous hodily harm. By theo both the Conservative and agreed that the existing criminal law was ineffective. Prosecutors were arguing that the stress caused by relentless stalking amounted to actual or grievous bodily harm but the problem was proving that the stalker intended his victim harm, the key part of the offence. The new law, the Protection from Harassment Act. created two new criminal offences to deal with stalking, which was deliberately left undefined, and a new civil offence of molestation... Under the Act, which came into force in June 1997, it is a criminal offence "to use words or behaviour, on more than one occasion. which would out the victim in fear of violence, either intentionally or in circumstaoces where a reasonable person would have realised this would be the effect". The maximum penalty is five years in jail aod/ or an unlimited fine.

It is also a criminal offence to use words or behaviour oo more than one occasion which could "cause the victim to be harassed. alarmed or distressed. either intentionally or in circumstances where a reasonable person would have realised this would be the effect". The maximum penalty is six months in jail and/or a £5,000 fine.

A restraining order is also available by an injunction where words or behaviour are used which cause the victim distress. A breach is a criminal offence with a penalty of five years in prison and/or an unlimited fine.

Somerset seaside resort mourns favourite daughter

By SIMON DE BRUXELLES

WESTON-SUPER-MARE was last night mourning its favourite daughter.

Although she travelled the world and became a household name Miss Dando never lost touch with the Somerset town where she grew up and later spent four years as a cub

She started her career on the local weekly newspaper, the Weston and Somerset Mercurv, where her father Jack. now in his 80s, was chief compositor and her older brother. Nigel was a reporter.

Mr Dando, 47, first heard of his sister's death in a television newsflash. Speaking at his father's bungalow in Weston last night he said: "I was working in the newsroom of the Bristol Evening Post when f got a call to say Jili had been involved in an incident. I decided to follow it up myself by making a couple of calls when a newsflash came on one of the TV screens in the office to say that Jill had been killed.

We are devastated by what has happened to Jill. It is simply unimaginable why any one should want to end her life in this tragic way.

The open, friendly, approachable personality who appeared on our TV screens was no act. I last saw her on Easter Sunday, when she and her fiance, Alan Farthing, came over to my house near Bath and we all had Sunday lunch. She was on good form. She was looking forward to her weddiog. We were all looking forward to that so much ... now this." Few places are bleaker than . a holiday resort out of season but a particular pall hung over Jill Dando's home town yesterday. The town bad been looking forward to emerging from its winter hibernation but in the bus queues and the cafés there was only glum faces and one topic of conversation. On the windswept seafroot where the grey sea merged with the grey sky, a solitary old man hunched against the wind as he read the front-page news in the evening paper. The current editor of the Mercury, where Miss Dando's career began in 1979, Judi Kisiel, said: "Jill was Weston's favourite daughter. The whole town is in shock."

Gordon Wilsher, the papers chief reporter for 40 years and Miss Dando's mentor, remembers a lively, enthusiastic personality who played a leading role in the Weston Dramatic Society and had un-usually good access to local government. "She never hid her ambition to get into broad-casting, but while she was here she always seemed to enjoy the job. She was a great favourite," he said. "One year, I recall, the Mayor of Weston was a bachelor who had his sister as his Lady Mayoress but if there was a function she couldn't attend, be'd ask Jill instead." Williams, the Jeremy former Editor of the Mercury who gave her that first job at the age of 16, said: "It was clear from the start how good she would be. She was very friendly, outgoing and really interested in people. Those qualities stayed with her throught her career and she never changed even though she became a star.

"She was always friendly and bubbly and nothing was too much trouble and went to great lengths to put people at ease. If you think of someone you would want around for dinner it would be Jill because you knew you would get a relaxed fun evening." No rest for the prisoners of fame

Jill Dando in 1988, when she worked for regional TV

FROM GILES WHITTELL IN LOS ANGELES

JILL DANDO'S death appears to have brought to London a scourge that for decades has made US stars prisoners of fame, surrounded night and day by al-most presidential levels of security.

Steven Spielberg and Madonna are merely the most recent household names to testify in court against obses-sive stalkers who, not satisfied with an autograph, set out to share their idols' lives; or even end them.

These two were among the lucky ones. On a summer night in Miami, in 1997, Gianni Versace was shot at point-blank range outside his house. The killing showed the risk public figures run in the US when choosing to step outside the security cordon that comes as a price of their celebrity. Since the gruesome killing of Roman Polanski's wife, the actress Sharon Tate, by Charles Manson's followers in 1969, stopping stalkers has been as much of a preoccupation for Hollywood royalty as pleasing fans.

Security guards and cameras are the: norm at stars' homes in Los Angeles, as are bodyguards for even the shortest outing. Younger celebrities who underesti-mate the risk do so at their peril; Brad Pitt was fortunate last year that a young woman who broke into his home only wanted to wear his pyjamas and sleep in with hair-trigger anxiety. The Spiel bergs, like Tom Cruise and Nicole Kidman, live behind anonymous gates and dense woods on spreets in Pacific Palisades were patrol cars from private security firms question strangers.

Others live either invisibly, except for rightly controlled public appearances, or

Most, but not all, are spotted. Last year Jonathan Norman, 31, was sentenced to life in prison for climbing into the Spielbergs' grounds with handcuffs, duct tape and, apparently, a morbid sexual obsession for the director. Details of the Spielberg family's daily routines were found in his flat. The year before Robert Hoskins, an unemployed loner, received a ten-year sentence for lingering in the driveway to a fortress-like mansion Madonna

YOUR HOME IS AT RISK IF YOU DO NOT KEEP UP REPAYMENTS ON A MONTCAGE OR OTHER LOAN SECURED ON IT. Call us for an Essential Cuide, Life Insurance is required, y must be aged 18 or over. The One account must be repaid by the time you retire. The rate of interest depends on the amount borrowed compared to the value of your home. For example, if you borrowed £90,000 secured against a home worth £120,000, you would pay £45%. This rate is variable and correct at 12.4.99. In this example, over 25 years a ging a treehold home in England would pay 6.7% APR. This APR Includes land registration fees and our solicitor's and valuer's fees which you will have to pay. In this example these tees would amount to E432, You would also have to pay your own solicitors' fees. In calculating the APR we have assumed you will pay your solicitor you pay on interest rate of 6.45%, requires total interest payments of £37,058. Using this mortgage to purchase a home worth £120,000 means that the total cost would be £207,058. Assuming that you have an income of £35,000 a year, spent evenly throughout the month, and that you make the same monthly repayment as ber the one-work 207(058. Assuming that you have an income of C35,000 a year, spent evenly throughout the month, and that you make the same monthly repayment as per the previous example, paying your income into the One account would reduce your borrowings and save you interest at 6,45%. This alone means that a £90,000 loan would be repaid 8 months early at a total interest cost of 681,977 - a saving of 65,081, if an annual payrise of 5% was added, where an extra 1% of total earnings was left in the One account each year the loan would be repaid 9 years 8 months early at a total interest cost of £54,214 - a saving of £32,843. Using a One account in this way to purchase a home worth £120,000 means that the total cost would be £174,214. Calls are recorded and randomly monitored. Camera-shy warrior comes clean

THE identity of a British Tommy caught in one of the most famous photographs of the D-Day landings has finally been uncovered (Paul Wilkinson writes).

For almost 45 years Roy
Walker kept quiet despite seeing himself in couotless newspapers, magazines and textbooks on the invasion oo June 6, 1944. He even resisted an Imperial War Museum appeal for soldiers in the shot taken on Sword beach to come forward.

But now Mr Walker has disclosed that he is the battleweary young soldier at the water's edge. He was discovered by Barrie Barnes, a teacher from Hall, who is writing a book about his old unit, the 50th Northumbrian Regiment.

Mr Walker, now 79, and living in Scarborough, said: "Barrie is the only one I've told apart from a few close friends. I've seen the picture published all over the place, but I'm not one for getting my name on the front page, so I just kept it to myself." He said he had been taking a wounded comrade in his bren-gun carrier to a beach first aid post. "I chased along the beach in my carrier and was stopped by the beachmaster, who bawled at me: 'What the bloody 'ell are you doing? You're attracting enemy fire ... 'I told him what had happened and had to walk my mate down to the water's edge, where a first aid post was being set up.

"As I was walking back to the guo carrier somebody took my photo, which appeared in all the daily papers later."

Alan Clark condemns 'incompetent' leader

WILLIAM Hague faced the first signs of open revolt at the jettisoning of his party's Thatcherite past yesterday with a direct assault on his leadership. Alan Clark, former minis-

Although regarded as a maverick, Mr Clark's re-marks echo the private misgivings of a number of Tory MPs at the handling and sub-stance of Mr Hague's new approach to public services.

There was also further confusion last night at the latest policy ideas floated by Peter Lilley, the Tory deputy tender. At the weekend he raised the prospect of privatising the Post Office and turning over proceeds from the National Lottery to the National Health Service, a proposal the Tories have vigorously attacked Labour for.

Lawyers on trial to mind their language

Frances Gibb sees judges lead courts into new world of English

LAWYERS entered their hrave new world of plain English and no Latin tags yester-day — with only mixed suc-

Within hours of the start of new reforms, part of the big-gest shake-up in civil justice this century, some had already fallen foul of the rules. Michael Tillett, QC. open-ing his case, told Mr Justice

Turner: "My Lord, I appear for the plaintiff in this action." "No you don't." came the judge's swift rebuke. "You appear for the claimant." The use of plain English is the linguistic element of a package of wide-ranging changes recommended by Lord Woolf, Master of the Rolls, to cut down on the costs and delays in civil literature.

But "Woolf Day" at the High Court in London was marked mainly by the occasional exchange of views over new terminology aimed at getting rid of centuries-old Latin and legal jargon. As Mr Justice Turner was correcting Mr Tillett in the Queen's Bench Division, one of his colleagues in the Chancery courts became the first (deliberately) to put his foot in it.

Mr Justice Neuberger welcomed assembled lawyers to the Interim Applications court (formerly known as Chancery Motions) and polite-ly warned them to stick to the Civil Procedure Rules (formerly the Rules of the Supreme Court) under which judges had wide powers to make or-ders on their own initiative in the interests of good case management. The language had changed as well as the proce-dure, he said, but nobody should feel embarrassed if they occasionally lapsed into the old way of saying things. He then promptly asked:

"Are there any ex parte mo-tions?" instead of the new mod-ern jargon, "applications with-out notice" No one objected and the judge went on to hear a list of interim applications with notice" (formerly inter partes mo-tions) for court orders follow-ing the issue of claim forms (formerly known as writs) by the claimants (who used to be the plainoffs). A new procedure to speed up medical negligence cases was launched yesterday with the aim of keeping lawyers out of hospitals and doctors out of courts (lan Murray writes).

Medical negligence cases currendy cost the NHSmore than £300 million a year, expected to more than double over the next five years if changes are had not been not been brought in. These cases also took five years to settle on average, twice as long as the normal civil case.

The new procedure relies for the first time on both sides giving each other all the facts of the case before it goes to court,

Patients who have a complaint will be able to ask for their full medical records and the hospital will have to provide them within 40 days. An out of court settlement will be easier, especially if the hospital is prepared to admit a mistake and apologise.

Alarm messages are kept in the cabin service director's area inside one of the galleys on BA Boeing 747s. The airline spokesman added: "The message is loaded and ready to go. It's just a matter of lifting a lid and pushing the button,"

The message told passengers to get into the brace position and to put on lifejackets because a forced landing was imminent. Several passengers became so distressed that the crew had to call for the assist-ance of a doctor on board. Lloyd Pople, from Reading, a passenger, said: "To be told matter that he has lived abroad, in Marbella or Monte Carlo, for more than 20 years; he is still regarded as Scotland's favourite son. The fact that he is frequently grumpy, tac-turn, legendarily tight with his mon-cy, litigious and, at best, cavalier in his attitude to women, seems only to have enhanced his standing.

When, in 1993, he was granted the freedom of the City of Edinburgh, the Usher Hall was packed to the rafters with ordinary folk who had come to welcome him back. He said a few gruff words, did a soft-shoe shuffle oo the stage — and brought the house down. "Good on you, Tam!" shouted a cracked Edinburgh voice from the crowd, and the place erupted. How he has achieved all this is something of a mystery. Being a Hollywood megastar is not an automatic passport to affection. Other Scots who have achieved fame and fortune abroad have fallen out badly with their fellow countrymen for getting too big for their boots. There is a famous Scots expression, "I kent yer faither", which carries the implicit warning: however grand you become, I know who you are and where you came from. Billy Connolly broke the rules by poking fun at his native Glasgow. The pop singer Sheena Easton is unlikely to be welcomed back after saying her Scottish background meant nothing to her. The jury is even out on the Chancellor, Gordoo Brown, who is judged to be rather more fond of

Downing Street than Dunfermline. Despite Connery's long exile, his enormous wealth, and the fact that he sometimes seems to treat Scotland as an extended golf course, he has avoided all such criticism. He is seen to be genuinely attached to his roots, he clearly enjoys coming back, and he is still recognisable as an archetypal Scot. A streak of male chauvinism, a laconic style, a tendency to hang on to his money, and a readiness to use his fists to settle a dispute if oecessary, have all added to, rather than diminished, his appeal. Those, for better or for worse, are red-blooded Scottish characteristics.

Whether all that is enough to persuade voters back to the SNP is another thing. They may well warm to Connery, but they are still more likely to decide the election on prosaic matters such as tax and the economy rather than the terse admonitioos o their hero. His entry on to the campaign scene has come a little late, his words yesterday too clipped to tip the balance. And though the crowd, as ever, enjoyed the sight of Big Tam back on native soil, it is likely to vote with its head rather than its heart.

As one of those interviewed yesterday put it "I'll definitely be going to his next movie. But I think I'll make op my own mind how I vote.

Labour pledges better childcare

Labour outlined measures to boost Scottish nursery and childcare services yes The initiative includes a "first steps" programme to provide education and health services for underthrees under one roof. It also guarantees nursery places for all three-year-olds by the end of the first parliament, and an expansion of after school and homework clubs

Blair 'lied over tuition fees'

Tony Blair was accused of lying over tuition fees by the Scottish Tories as the party unveiled a new campaign poster in Edinburgh. The Prime Minister appeared next to the word "Bliar" with a quotation from 1997 in which he stated he had no plans to introduce tuition fees. David McLetchie, Scottish Tory leader, said the Tories would abolish them.

Be calm but vigilant, Straw tells minorities

By Stewart Tendler and Michael Evans

JACK STRAW, the Home Secretary, urged ethnic communities yesterday not to panic after the nail bomb attacks in Brixton and Brick Lane but told them to remain vigilant.

As Mr Straw described to the Commons the police efforts being made to catch the bomber, Scotland Yard detectives sent two emergency messages to every force in the country. They gave details of the attacks and warned any force with an ethnic community to consider ways of increasing their protection.

Mr Straw told MPs: "Any attacks on these communities is an attack on British people and the whole of British society. We will not tolerate racism of any kind, still less this abhorrent crime."

MIS officers who have joined the hunt for the bomber were working on theories that the attacker or attackers could be breakaway members of the neo-Nazi group Combat 18.

Black police upset by 'race bias' posters

By STEWART TENDLER, CRIME CORRESPONDENT

A POSTER campaign using shock tactics to tackle racism in the police service began yesterday in spite of objections from black officers.

Produced for the Police Federation, which represents junior officers in England and Wales, the posters are similar to some used in a campaign last year by the Commission for Racial Equality. They were drawn up as part of the response to the Macpherson report on the police investigation into Stephen Lawrence's murder and are meant to challenge preconceptions. Some black officers recommended that the federation should abandon the campaign, but the commission backed the theme.

Designs drawn up by the federation include one poster showing a black man and a car and asking: "What do you call a black man in a BMW?" The poster explains he is a traffic squad sergeant on patrol. Another shows a black man and the slogan "Been mugged?" Underneath, it says: "Tell him, he's a police officer."

Labour anticipates defeat in local polls

LOCAL GOVERNMENT CORRESPONDENT

THE Labour Party is preparing for a record low turnout and the loss of up to 1,500 seats in next month's local elections because of public dissatisfaction with corruption in town halls and indifference towards council politics.

Hilary Armstrong, the Local Government Minister, admitted yesterday that Labour would suffer more than any other party because it is defending its best local election results. It won 47 per cent of the vote in 1995, the last time the same 13,000 seats in Engiand, Scotland and Wales were contested; that represented a 3 per cent increase over the 1997 general election.

Ms Armstrong said she did not expect the turnout to improve on last year's local polls. when only 26 per cent of the electorate bothered to vote. In some wards the turnout was as low as 10 per cent.

"Low turnout is my main anxiety. Very few people are aware that there are local elecmore interest in the elections

VOTES WILL DECIDE 13,000 SEATS

More than 13,000 seats in 362 councils in England, Scotland and Wales are being contested in the local clections on May 6. The elections cover 35 English unitary authorities. 36 English metropolitan authorities. 37 English non-metropolitan districts, 32 Scottish councils and 22 Weish councils. No London councils have elections on May 6. The last time the same seats were confested was in 1995.

School of Economics, shares

that view. "The Blair Government believes in local govern-ment, but they want a different kind of local government from the one we have now. They would prefer one with lots of different people in it. As far as they are concerned, a low turn-out would justify all their proposed changes."

The Conservatives, who will benefit to a limited extent from a low turnout, are trying to

campaign. Richard Ottaway,

the party's town-hall spokesman, listed more than 50 instances of "sleaze, incompetence, financial irresponsibility" and "downright criminal activity". But some of his examples illustrate the difficulties of

for the Scottish Parliament and the Welsh Assembly," she

In anticipation of a poor turnout. Labour is already planning to bolster its campaign for wide-ranging reform of local government. Propos-als on the table include a new code of ethics and management structures for councils. The party also wants to intro-duce personalities by creating directly-elected city mayors.

She also suggested that electoral losses for Labour would enable new candidates to enter town-hall politics. "One of the problems is that we now have councillors who tend to be much older, often retired and not working, and mainly men. That is not good democracy."

Tony Travers, local govern-trying to tarnish all Labour councils with the misdemeanours of the few. His sleaze dossier includes Thurrock, where the Labour council had "unfairly targeted smokers" by requiring them to work an extra 21/2 hours a week to make up for their cigarette breaks, and Wycombe, where the joint Liberal-Labour administration had located two park and ride sites close to residential areas.

The sleaze factor notwithstanding, the Tories are set to win 1,100 to 1,400 seats on May 6. In 1995, the Tories attained just 25 per cent of the vote. losing 2,000 seats and 61 councils.

Most experts agree that it is inconceivable that they will not at least benefit from "a dead cat bounce" upwards. The Tories' best chances for victory are not, however, in Labour boroughs but in places such as Bromsgrove and Ashford, which the party lost in 1995, but where a Tory MP was elected in 1997.

The Liberal Democrats stand to benefit most from sleaze in Labour town halls. In Doncaster, they are regarded by many as the only credible

Doncaster's new breed disowns past

By James Landale, Political Correspondent

WHEN Martin Winter, a Labour candidate for next month's local elections, goes doorstepping in Doncaster, he gives voters a now familiar

"You don't know me from Adam," he says, "But I am as honest as the day is long. I am a new candidate. I am nothing to do with 'Donnygate'. And I think it is time this council had a clean sweep."

For Mr Winter, a 37-yearold former Rugby League pro-fessional and father of three. knows there is only one real issue for voters in this South Yorkshire town — trust.

How can anyone trust a town hall which has been so riven with corruption - and Labour Party that has always controlled it?

"Donnygate" is already two years old but the end is not in sight. Some 31 people have been arrested. Councillors, former councillors, and even some council officers have faced allegations concerning expenses fraud, planning irregularities and overseas junkets. Four people have been jailed and one fined. Two more are due in court shortly. These cases relate only to false accounting charges. What South Yorkshire Police call the "more serious allegations" relating to planning issues are yet to come. The police inquiry has already cost well £200,000.

The local Labour Party is in turmoil: the council is on its third leader in as many years and the district party is still suspended. Two years ago La-bour had 57 of the 63 council seats. Now it has just 43, losses caused as much by party sus-pensions as by electoral de-

The Liberal Democrats sniff blood and hope to double their six seats in May. The Tories hope to add to their three seats. Close observers predict that Labour will lose half a dozen seats but retain control for now.

For Labour candidates like Martin Winter, there is no choice but to face the mess head on. So he distributes disarmingly frank election literature: "As a newly selected candidate, Martin Winter has no connection with any of the past events concerning Doncaster council." Other new candidates insist that new Labour will provide a "new council, a better council".

The approach is being en-couraged by Caroline Flint and Rosie Winterton, two newly-elected local Labour MPs. who are desperately trying to move the local party on. But with more trials and court appearances in the offing, activists are becoming frustrated at their inability to put "Donnygate" behind them. To the good. they say the scandals have made them work harder. Some 21 seats are up for grabs on May 6 and all but one are held by Labour. But about half Labour's incumbents are standing down to be replaced by first-timers. Local party chiefs insist the retirements are caused by age and ill-health. Party members suspect a precautionary clear-out.

OTHER COUNCILS HIT BY SLEAZE CLAIMS

DONCASTER is the biggest but not the only Labour town hall that has been dogged by allegations of wrongdoing and bitter party infighting (Alexandra Frean writes). While some allegations of corruption or impropriety have resulted in police investigations, in others the Labour Party has conducted its own inquiries and has suspended a number of councillors or. in some cases, the entire local Labour's readmess to tackle these allegations head on is a mark of Tony Blair's determination not to let town halls become the weak point of his administration.

In 1995, the local Labour party in Walsall was suspended over allegations that some councillors took a free holiday at local taxpayers' ex-pense. No criminal charges were ever instituted.

In Barnsley, two local Labour branches were suspended after allegations of nepotism in the selection of candidates for council seats.

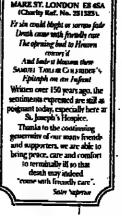

In John Prescott's bome territory of Hull, Labour's National Executive was brought in to monitor the selection of candidates for this year's local elections after a bout of ward in-fighting and allegations, which were not proved, of misuse of power. Other Labour councils that have become mired in allega tions of sleaze or party infighting include Blacuau Gwent, North Lanarkshire. Renfrewshire and Glasgow, Wakefield, Slough, Hackney, Rotherham, Barnsley and

Party politics force pair out of union posts

TWO students have been dis-qualified from senior positions in the Oxford Union after being found guilty of electoral malpractice for holding a birthday party two days be-

A tribunal ruled that Jeff Bell and Lucy Aitkens had staged the party to solicit votes. They were asked to stand down as treasurer and librarian respectively only days after being elected on

Mr Bell, who had been unopposed, said yesterday that the ruling followed a complaint to the union by Miss Aitkens's defeated opponent, Hatty Cadman, who has since been elected in her place as librarian,

The tribunal was told that 400 invitations were sent out for the party, with almost half not addressed to an individual but simply posted in students'

After a hearing lasting several hours, the union ruled that not all the guests could have been personal friends and disqualified the pair for "organ-ised treating which was likely to affect the result".

The tribunal, on March 10, found that the party was intended primarily to increase the exposure of both candidates and to influence voting.
The students had also paid

Mr Bell now believed they were the victims of an old school tie system. "I love the university and the Oxford Union is a great institution, but, as I'm from the North East and Lucy is from Australia, maybe we did not fit in.

"I think it is a travesty. If the date of our birthday had been two weeks later, we would have held the party for the same reasons and there would have been no problem. It is a which brought us down."

He said that more than 100 people were at the event partly because he and Miss Aitkens knew a lot of people and partly to ensure that they were not left out of pocket.

Miss Aitkens had also been before the tribunal accused of organised treating on March 2, when the American talk show host Jerry Springer was a guest at the union. She was alleged to have "handed out sweets to members of the audience in a random fashion and tion to herself".

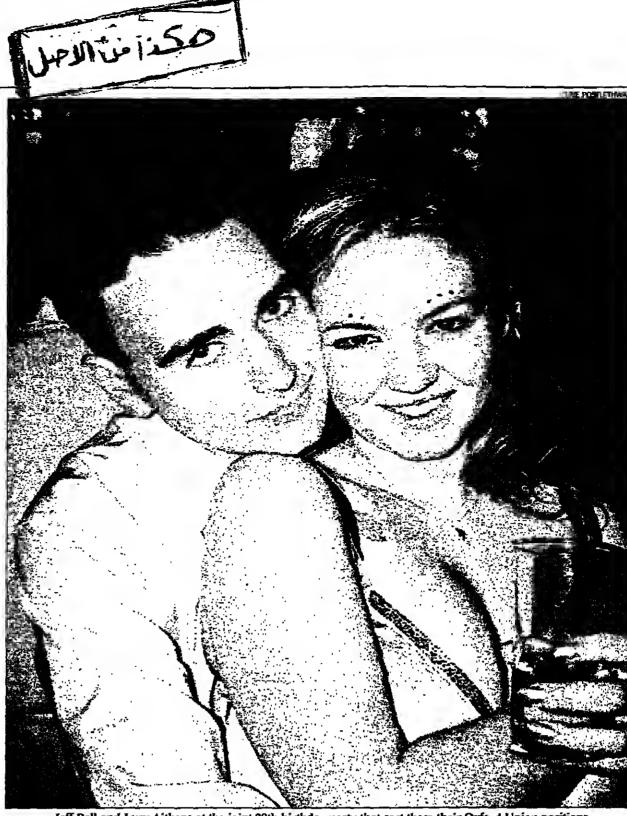

However, the tribunal found that, although her be-haviour was flamboyant and possibly attention-seeking, in was not in breach of the rules.

Nicky Black, President of the Oxford Union, said yesterday that the two had been dis-qualified because it was found that they had held the birthday party with the intention of soliciting votes.

"They can stand again for other positions, but they will not be able to stand again for these particular posts." she

Miss Cadman, who also assumes the title of vice-presi-dent, said: "I felt I had lost unfairly and now the tribunal has ruled I lost unfairly.

Several people have since accused us of doing something below the belt and there is a bit of bad feeling and I feel a bit uncomfortable at times. Obviously this isn't the way that I would have liked to become librarian, but I think it is perfectly acceptable for me to

Stars unite to fight world debt | Claret route to health

BY ADAM SHERWIN

FOURTEEN years after Live Aid, the world's leading musicians are uniting once more for a global concert to help the Third World.

Harvey Goldsmith, the Live Aid promoter, is gathering the cream of the entertainment world for simultaneous concerts in London. New York and Geneva. on October 9. The event will be called Net Aid and the organisers hope that one billion people will send a message to politicians through the Internet, urging them to remove the debt hanging over the poorest countries. Michael Jackson, Sir Paul McCartney and U2 are expected to participate in the concerts, to be held at Wembley Stadium, Giants Stadium in New York and a venue in Geneva.

The concerts will be the last big gathering of music stars this century. It is hoped that they will include Bob Dylan, REM and Luciano Pavarotti, as well as celebrities from film and sport. They will be broadcast live around the world to what is intended to be the largest global television audience for a single event. Bob Geldof, who put together Live Aid, which raised £123 million in 1985, is understood to be helping the project, but does not wish to take a frontline role.

Geri Halliwell, former Spice Girl and a UN goodwill ambassador, may become a spokeswoman for the campaign. Mr Goldsmith, who will announce the project at the United Nations in New York today, said: "The end of the millennium is the right time for a huge event to highlight the question of how extreme poverty can be eradicated."

Net Aid is being run in conjunction with the UN Development Programme, which provides funds to help countries to combat hunger and environmental damage and foster job creation.

RED wine helps to prevent heart disease and Cabernet Sauvignon does it best of all, says a French doctor. Jean-Paul Broustet suggests half a bottle a day also wards off dementias such as Alzheimer's disease (lan Murray writes). M Broustet, of the Höpital Cardiologique near Pessac, in the Bordeaux vineyards, writes in the journal Heart that cabernet sauvignon, the main claret grape, contains the best antidote to cholesterol. This is because the vines protect themselves against an autumn fungus by producing large quantities of an anti-oxidant called resveratrol.

Resveratrol produces a high-density cholesterol which prevents the body producing dangerous low-density choles-terol. This probably explains why the French, with a high intake of fats and cholesterol. have the lowest rate of chronic heart disease in Europe.

Dr Broustet points out that the death rate from coronaries in Toulouse among men aged 35 to 64 is only 78 per 100,000. This compares with 348 per 100,000 in Belfast and 380 in Glasgow. The average drinker in each city consumes about the same amount of alcohol but in Toulouse it is almost exclusively red wine. Residents at old people's homes in the Gironde and Dordogne who drank two or three asses of red wine a day were fifth as likely to develop Alzhelmer's as non-drinkers.

Living in a damp flat is making this asthmatic child critically ill.

And the Government's plans will delay the help she needs.

Without a lawyer, this child's mother can't get her landlord to do anything about the terrible conditions in her flat.

But under the Access to Justice Bill, getting legal aid for housing disrepair claims will be a long and difficult process.

So what's the point of having rights, if basic access to justice is denied?

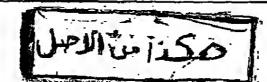

This Bill will hit the poorest and most vulnerable—the very people who need legal aid.

The National Housing Federation shares these concerns about the impact of the Bill.

BALKANS WAR: THE REFUGEES

Chance call that reunited a family on way to Britain

A child's joy reflects the drama of rediscovering her father, write Stephen Farrell and Paul Wilkinson

AS SHE smiled and waved AS SHE smiled and waved from the steps of the aircraft bringing her to Britain, a young Kosovan refugee was also celebrating finding her father by the sheerest chance. Thirty-six hours before her arrival in Leeds, Gentiana

Zogjani, her mother, Hanife, and her three brothers and sisters were in despair. Her father had been missing for weeks and they had reluctantly agreed to be put on a humanitarian relief flight to Britain without him.

Then Mrs Zogjani, 33, telephoned her husband Bajram's brother in Sweden to tell him where she was going, only to find that her husband had just telephoned his brother himself, and was no more than a few hundred yards away from her in the Stenkovec border refugee camp in northern Macedonia.

He quickly went to his family's tent, number B172 in the nearby Brazde camp. This reunited the family, but left them in the terrible position of knowing that mother and children were booked on a flight to Britain but father was not.

They turned up at the Brazde gate at Sam on Sunday to plead his case with officials who drew up the list of 161 mainly women and children in a vulnerable position whom Britain had agreed to accept.

"I fust want to get out of here, it is hell, we would go anywhere," Mrs Zogjani told The Times. Their hopes rose and fell as it became clear that of the 161 scheduled to fly out,

ON OTHER PAGES The next sten Libby Parves

13 had not shown up. However. other equally hopeful people clustered at the tent

The Zogjanis' position looked impossible. But then, barely two hours before the scheduled lOam departure from Skopje, officials exercised their discretion and allocated Mr Zogjani, 35, one of the spare seats.

The delighted family were whisked through the registration tent to doctors who gave them a medical check and put them on a bus for the airport. It was one good luck story among thousands of misery. A woman who turned up for the same flight with a man she described as her partner, but who was not the father of her children, was turned away.

Meanwhile, Jehona Aliu, the five-year-old Kosovan refugee who lost her mother when where names were checked. she went to the lavatory, has been reunited with a relative.

Remzi Berisha, 30, a cousin of her mother, Sadije, was found in another teni at the giant Brazde camp in north-ern Macedonia where Jehona has been for nearly four weeks. But the child decided to stay with Farmire Cecelija and her husband, Xajvit, the couple who took her in after los-ng their own two sons. In Britain, offers of help have been pouring in for the arriving refugees. Calls offering accommodation have come from as far away as Taunton and Oxford, and social services staff in Leeds where the Kosovans are staying have been swamped with offers of assistance.

An appeal for clothing by the Salvation Army to retailers in Leeds brought a donation of 40 sets of pyjamas and nightdresses from Woolworths and more clothing and footwear have also been given by C&A and Marks and Spencer.

Mike Evans, assistant director of social services, said: "We have had everything from cuddly toys and donations of mon-

FROM CHARLES BREMNER IN LUXEMBOURG

EUROPE tightened sanctions on President Milosevic and his circle yesterday, but the Nato alliance conceded that it could not use force to police a European Union oil embargo and turn back tankers that were taking fuel to Yugoslavia.

EU foreign ministers extended a range of sanctions with the aim of hitting Mr Milosevic and his immediate entourage of business-men and politicians. European sports federations were urged to refuse further contact with Yugoslavia.

The ministers gave orders for the EU oil embargo on Serbia and Montenegro to enter force by Friday, However, differences among the EU governments over the legality of the embargo led Nato to opt yesterday for a gentle enforcement regime. General Klaus Naumann, chairman of the alliance's Military Committee, said Nato warships would stop tankers in the Adriatic, visit them and search them, but they did not bave the legal right to force them to turn round. This cautious approach reflected objections from France, Italy, Greece, Ireland and other states to the enforcement of a naval blockade against Montenegro, whose port at Bar is the main route for petroleum products reaching Serbia. General Naumann said that the prospect of a Nato search would still have a deterrent effect. "I think we will see a certain impact

... third nations' ships will get very, very cautious -they will think twice whether they will take this route. because no one likes to be stopped at sea by a warship," he said.

Nato ambassadors were meeting in Brussels last night to draw up "search and visit" orders for Nato ships patrolling the region. Confrontation with Russia is still possible, however, since Russian vessels may be unwilling to submit to being stopped and searched by Nato warships. The absence of any international mandate to enforce a blockade means that Nato warships effectively will be powerless even to insist on boarding a tanker if the captain of the vessel refuses. In a sign of its differences with the EU majority. France did not even send a minister to yesterday's session.

Among other new sanctions are a freeze on EU-held financial assets of Mr Milosevic and individuals associated with him and their companies.

Briton outfoxes border guards

Nato bombers hit a chemical plant near Sabac, home of her mother and brother. The family is now back at Mr Ashby's home above the Malt Shovel

FROM IAN BRODIE IN WASHINGTON

THE international Red Cross was finally allowed yesterday to see the three American soldiers taken prisoner by Yugoslavia a month ago, but it was only a fleeting visit.

White House aides protested that the Belgrade visit by Cornelio Sommaruga, the Swiss president of the International Committee of the Red Cross, fell short of internationally agreed requirements for prisoners of war, as it was held in the presence of Yugoslav officials. It was the first time an outsider had been allowed to see the three since they were seized in unclear circumstances while patrolling the border of Macedooia and Kosovo on

Mr Sommaruga had been given assurances by the Yugoslav authorities that a doctor and other Red Cross officials would be allowed to see the soldiers for a full and private visit today, in keeping with the lerms of the Geneva convention on PoWs. He gave no indication of the men's physical condition, but when they were last seen - in a video released the day after their capture - their faces were bruised and cut. "I was able to talk to them for only a few minutes, but it was a normal talk, looking into each others' eyes and warmly shaking their hands," Mr Sommaruga said. He delivered messages from their families. Amanda Williamson, at the international Red Cross headquarters in Geneva, said: "It's most important for us to have a private talk, with no witnesses. in which the detainees can raise any difficulties they might have about their conditions and to give them the opportunity to send a confidential message through the Red Cross to their families."

An American demand for the soldiers' immediale release was reiterated by David Leavy, for the National Security Council. The United States says that they should not be held because they were cap-tured in Macedonia by Yugoslav troops who had crossed

Mr Sommaruga did not raise the question of repatriation because, under international law. PoWs are liberated only at the end of active hostili-Still, there was a sense of relief in America that the three were alive and apparently well. On their arrest, Yugoslav authorities threatened to put them on trial, but nothing more has been heard of what would be a violation of the Geneva accords.

Mr Sommaruga also met President Milosevic to discuss the return of ethnic Albanian refugees to Kosovo, but Tanjug. the state-run Yugoslav news agency, said that Mr Milosevic had refused to discuss the matter while air raids

BALKANS WAR: THE NEXT STEP

The Prime Minister, now back in Britain, was criticised for his warlike stance in America where he was said to upstage President Clinton

No 10 denies Clinton put brakes on hawkish Blair

By Philip Webster and Ben Macintyre in washington

THE Prime Minister denied yesterday that President Clinton had appealed to him last week to stop talking about ground troops in reference to the conflict over Kosovo, despite claims to the cootrary in The Washington Post.

The Washington Post.

Downing Street sought to nip in the bud reports that, when the two men had a discussion before the Nato summit, Mr Clinton had told Tony Blair to tone down his belligerent rhetoric. Asked by ABC whether the suggestion in the Post was true, Mr Blair replied: "No, not at all."

Yesterday he told the Commons that the summit itself had indeed discussed ground troops. What the President and Mr Blair appear to have agreed was that all questions about the use of ground troops should be covered by referring to the assessment being conducted by Javier Solana, Nato's Secretary-General, of all the options. In an apparent recognition

ground troops had helped President Milosevic, the line was to be that Nato would not discuss its military tactics and strategy in public, it was a position around which all Nato members, including the doubters, could unite.

On his return from Washington yesterday, the Prime Minister seemed not to have retreated at all from his presente of the properties of land forces against a "degraded" Milosevic machine could be contemplated. He insisted that President Milosevic had no veto on Nato actions, referring several times to the continuing build-up of forces in the area.

George Robertson, the Defence Secretary, took the same line in London yesterday. He said the decision to look at all options was a "sensible contingency measure". There was no intention to mount a wholesale invasion of Kosovo but it was "sensible to re-examine our existing plans for a ground deployment in the tight of changing circumstances".

Mr Blair's hawkish stance in the United States made him the most visible figure at the summit, and he struck a more warlike posture than any other Nato leader. His tour of the television stations and the Midwest recalled Margaret Thatcher's hardline approach. The New York Times noted that Mr Blair's detractors at the summit were "wondering who crowned him 'King Tony'". The conservative Republican, Pat Buchanan, an opponent of US military intervention, derided Mr Blair as "the mouse that roared. It isn't going to be British troops humping up the road to Belgrade." Others used Mr Blair's House. Senator Jesse Helms, the veteran rightwinger, hailed him as "the most eloquent leader in the Western world". The White House insisted that Mr Clinton was not be-

Yugoslav moderate makes TV bid for peace

By Tom Walker and Michael Binyon

VUK DRASKOVIC, Yugoslavia's Deputy Prime Minister, made a dramatic tilt at peace for Kosovo yesterday. In a series of interviews, he proposed that his Government should accept UN troops in the province — on the condition that it remained part of Serbia.

Mr Draskovic, the former opposition figurehead who nearly broke the Milosevic reign in the winter of 1996, is now trying to force change from inside the regime.

He insisted yesterday that he had the backing of his president in advising the Serbs that they were detuding themselves if they thought that Russia was about to go to their rescue.

"Our destiny is in our hands to the extent to which those who lead the country have brains in their heads," he said on Studio B, a television channel controlled by his Serbian

MAN IN THE NEWS

Author rewrote history

ONE of the most charismatic Serbian politicians of the last decade, Vuk Draskovic was at first better known as a writer (Tom Walker writes). His novels dwelf on the inter-ethnic conflicts of the Herzegovina region and his book, Knife, has just been made into a film.

In an earlier nationalist phase he firsted with the far Right led by Vojislav Seselj, and the two were best men to each other. Mr Draskovic now leads the Serbian Renewal Movement that spearheaded the street protests of the winter of 1996-97 against the Milosevic regime. In his latest incarnation, he is a member of the ruling

Renewal Movement. "I do not believe there is any sense in the heads of those who are invoking World War Three and lying to the people that Russia would be involved in World War Three. The people should be told the truth: we are on our own."

Mr Draskovic said that he had been driven to his outburst by the unity shown among Nato member states at their weekend summit in Washington. He realised, he said, that hopes of a split emerging in Nato ranks were unfounded, and that Serbia and Yugoslavia had to face

"We must be ready for very urgent and very brave moves towards approaching a compromise and peace based on the Charter of the United Nations," he said. Such overtures would make it clear there would be "no independent Kosovo, no great Albania in the Balkans, and no Kosovo as a third Yugoslav republic".

Analysts were divided about his chances of success. But the cracks in the Yugoslav leadership may go far deeper than the disagreements apparent from Mr Draskovic's broadcast. Government officials, diplomats and Serb exiles spoke of seething discontent with President Milosevic, and claimed that there was a threat of an coup by middleranking army officers to remove him.

Dissident Serb exiles said that a circle of potencial conspirators was ready to arrest Mr Milosevic for high treason and was waiting only for a signal by Nato.

Bratislav Grubacic, the editor of Belgrade's VIP newsletter, said in his column that "according to local sources, the interview is probably the result of his estimate that Milosevic will accept armed UN troops in Kosovo. Apparently, Draskovic is jockeying for position".

Mr Grubacic, one of the few independent editors brave enough to keep publishing in Belgrade, speculated that Mr Draskovic "believes he can win over a part of the police force and the army, as well as a part of the ruling party and of the entire coalition".

Most analysts agreed that Mr Draskovic was too powerful to be in danger of assassination. He has been the only politician throughout the airstrikes to court the West, and underlined that Yugoslavia was ready to accept most Western requests on Kosovo.

ern requests on Rosovo.

He recalled that Yugoslavia was one of the UN's founders and estimated the cost of the airstrikes at about £25 billion. He said that damage to the country was worse than in the Second World War.

Denver killers planned 'apocalypse'

THE devastation at Columbine High School last week was merely the first stage of a broad campaign of terror planned by the two teenage gunmen, it emerged yesterday. They had hoped to kill 500 pupils and teachers, take others hostage, hijack a helicopter and then an airliner. and crash-land it on a major city, officials said.

Venezuela hacks ti plan for radical reforms

By Gabriella Gamini SOUTH AMERICA CORRESPONDENT

AFTER more than 40 years of democracy. Venezuelans have voted overwhelmingly in favour of plans by President Chávez to tear up the constitution and rebuild the nation, virtually from scratch.

Señor Chávez - a former army colonel who in 1992 led a failed coup -- took office in January, vowing to rewrite a constitution that he said had allowed "corrupt and rotten" rule by a minority elite.

On Sunday Venezuelans voted in a referendum, and re-sults released yesterday show that 92 per cent of those who turned out backed the change. And 85 per cent said they were happy with the President's wish to establish a constitutent assembly (replacing Congress) to draft the new document.

His most loyal support comes from the vast majority of Venezuelans, who live be-low the poverty line and are convinced that the old system deprived them of a fair share of the country's oil wealth.

However, critics of Señor Chavez say the poll result fails to give him the moral authority to make the sweeping chang-es, only 39 per cent of the popu-lation having voted.

The opposition had said that anything less than a 50 per cent turnout would make the result invalid. The populist Señor Chavez, known for his autocratic ways and a scant regard for democratic institutions, is accused of pushing the country towards a dictatorship.

Analysts say that while the opposition still argues that the majority of Venezuelans boycotted the poll, the President has a constitutional right to go ahead. Venezuela's democraoc past has been tainted by corruption scandals, with the decisionmaking elite pocketing most of the early 1980s oil boom wealth. Since oil prices dropped sharply, the country has become one of South America's poorest, marked by economic upheavals and a vol-atile political leadership.

spected college have wrinen to Lionel Jospin, the Prime Minister, demanding government help to end their reputation for arrogance.

The haughty tone of their letter suggests that the task may be beyond even the sweeping powers of the Prime Minister's office. The students believe they will achieve their goal if they are given less work. This year's graduates from the elite Ecole Nacionale d'Administration, which counts President Chirac and M Jospin among its alumni, blame the packed curriculum for their bad image with the public. They enter the Ecole full of enthusisasm "to serve their fellow citizens", they say in the lener. But this is dampened by a "course without vision or an educadonal project", according to the 1999 graduates. Set up in 1945 to train France's brightest students to become highranking civil servants, the Ecole is floundering, say the elite rebels. They want a return to "its original mission . . . to assure a democratic access to the upper civil service" The means to this end should involve a reduction in the number of "repetitive tests and courses".

Critics say the 40 or so graduates from the Ecole each year are imbued not so much with a sense of the state's interests as with a sense of their own importance. Since a large proportion of ministers and industrial leaders are drawn from the Ecole's graduates, they are widely blamed for the poor performance of the French economy in the 1990s.

France's teenage firebombers barred from buying petrol

FRENCH teenagers in a high-crime area near Paris were banned yesterday from buying petrol in an attempt to curb their latest fad for hurling petrol bombs at vehicles and emergency services.

The decision by Michel Thenault, prefect in the Yvelines area near Paris, is one of a series of official attempts to clamp down on a youth crime wave. His ruling comes amid anguished public debate about the bored and bitter adolescents who have aban-

in Lyons, central France, more than 1,000 cars were set ablaze last year. In January a car exploded, severely injuring six firemen. Last week, in Yvelines, 15 vehicles were set alight. A gang of teenagers also fire-bombed a youth centre and threw a petrol bomb at a police car. In a neighbouring area another gang bombed a salooo parked outside a police station.

Officers said that it had been an ordinary week in the suburbs of Paris. "We must do something to stop this spread of criminal acts and saleguard everyone's securi-ty." M Thenault said. Yesterday's ruling makes it illegal for garages in the region to fill petrol cans belonging to anyone under the age of 18. Teenagers, however, will be able to buy fuel for their scooters, M Thenault said.

The move by the prefect -the Interior Ministry's representative in the department — reflects an increasingly desperare quest by the Government for answers to juvenile crime. Last year, when overall crime rose by 2 per cent, the number jumped by 11 per cent.

Lionel Jospin, the Prime Minister, has responded to the youth crime wave by announcing that his Govern-ment would fund 50 new young offenders' institutions and place 7,000 police officers in "sensitive" regions.

ing for swifter and tougher action, claiming that officers in the suburbs now work with "fear in their bellies". The targeting of firemen has come as a surprise because in France they also constitute the country's main emergency ambulance service.

Warrant Officer Jean-Pierre Jammet, a fire officer whose appliance was attacked in Janaury, said: "I would never have imagined that this could happen. We would just like to know why it happens."

Jean-Luc Chivot, a spokesperson for the fire brigade in Paris, said: "When youths start going for the ambulances, that's civil war." Farhad Khosrokhavar, a sociologist who has studied the petrol-bomb vandals in Strasbourg, eastern France, at-templed an explanation. "When firemen put out a car that is burning, they stop the show that people are enjoying as a break from their daily lives," he said.

Four shot as Dutch police fire on football rioters

Police suspect that the rioting was planned. Several fans were armed and there was evifired at the nearby Hilton Hotel, shattering a window. Officers fired several warning shots before firing into the crowd. Mr Peper said.

Hundreds of shop windows in the centre of the Dutch port city were smashed and guests in the Hilton threw themselves on the floor to avoid a hail of broken glass.

Kremlin rocked by hotel blast

Moscow: Ten people were hurt yesterday when an explosion ripped through a hotel just yards from the Kremlin, spraying the busy Tverskaya bonlevard with glass and debris. Police, special forces and Federal Security Service agents sealed off the immediate area around the Intourist Hotel, pushing back crowds of office workers, tourists and journalists. Although officials at the scene refused to comment on the blast, a Moscow police spokeswoman said it had been caused by n 21b explosive charge in a service lift on the 20th floor. Officials said that President Yeltsin was not in the Kremlin at the time of the blast, which one parliamentary aide said was audible

New Indian election

President Narayanan dissolved India's lower house of parliament, paving the way for a third general election in three years after the failure of the main opposition Congress party to form a new government [Michael Binyon writes]. The order came hours after the outgoing Hindu nationalist Government of Atal Bihari Vajpayee called for a dissolution. On Sunday Sonia Gandhi, the Congress party leader, ruled out a minority government with the understanding of other opposition parties.

Cairo frees militants

Nicosia: Egypt has freed more than 1,000 Islamie. militants in the biggest such prisoner release since fundamentalists launched an armed campaign to topple President Mubarak's pro-Western Government seven years ago (Michael Theodonlou writes). All were members of al-Gamaa al-Islamiya, the Islamie group that said last month that it was halting all armed operations. Defence lawyers welcomed the move as a conciliatory gesture that would help to reduce tension and violence.

Pay rise for Euro MPs

Luxembourg: British MEPs will enjoy a £3,000 annual pay rise under an accord by European Union ministers that aims to clean up the gravy-train image of the Enropean Parliament (Charles Bremner writes). The ministers set a standard annual salary of £47,700, ending the system by which members received the same as MPs in their national legislatures. The sum is about £3.000 higher than for a member of the House of Commons. The package also restricts their expenses claims.

Palestinian 'UDI' talks

Jerusalem: The Palestinian Central Council will begin a session in Gaza today to decide whether to implement carlier threats by Yassir Arafat to declare an independent Palestinian state on May 4, the end of the five-year antonnmy period agreed at Oslo (Christopher Walker writes). Mr Arafat's supporters were under international Israeli pressure to defer the decision, at least until after the Israeli election on May 17, and possibly for months longer, to allow the stalled peace talks a new chance.

THE Vatican is to recruit secret agents from Western intelligence services to improve security in the Holy See and protect the Pope during the millennium celebrations. On Saturday the Vatican's official

The new security committee will co-ordinate the work of the 100-strong Swiss Guard, the Pope's colourful private army, and the 120 men of the Corpo di Vigilanza, the Vatican's uniformed police.

Franco Frattini, the chairman of the Parliamentary Committee overseeing Italy's Secret Services, announced that the Vatican would set up a counter-intelligence service. Its agents - former employees of Western spy organisacions — will work with their Italian counterparts.

Signor Frattini told II Messaggero newspaper: "They will have to be reliable and above all have an immaculate curriculum, because they will need to be trustworthy." He said that agents from Sismi, Italy's military intelligence, and Sisde, the country's counter-intelligence agency, could not spy for the Pope.

"I don't believe we will lend secret agents. Italian personnel cannot be put in the employ of a foreign state, not even the Vatican. I believe the Vatican will be able to recruit and train outside operatives. The intelligence market offers highly specialised staff.

"Unemployment is rife among se-cret agents, especially those from Eastern Europe, though I do not suppose the Vatican will want to recruit former KGB or Stasi agents. Those people excluded, the Vaocan will have to find people with an adequate resume to have worked in the Western world. Those are the basic conditions for being able to co-ordinate with our 007s."

Intelligence experts at the Palazzo Chigi, the office of the Italian Prime Minister, would liaise with the Holy See to ensure the Vatican selected people who would not endanger Italy's security, said Signor Frattini.

Grace Bradberry on why the death of Jill Dando has affected so many people of us, ing in the way that the violent death of a neighbour would be, or the arrest of the local vicar for armed robbery. She was successful precisely because you felt that she could have been your sister or your best friend; and therein lies the reason so many feel so affected by her murder — it is utterly unlikely and disturbingly close to home.

She was extraordinary in her ordinariness," was how Leslie Fake, the chairman of Weston Hospicecare, put it yesterday, and that view has been repeated, in different words, by friends and col-leagues alike. "A very uncomplicaled star," was Alan Yentob's tribute. "A natural human being," said the TV producer Chris Denham, adding that Dando was the perfect dinner dreds of thousands of people around the country could having Dando to dinner. Hundreds of thousands more could imagine dropping round to borrow a cup of sugar from her. In one survey she was voted the neighbour the British public would most like to have.

So we all understood when John Humphrys yesterday de-scribed himself as "inarticulate" with shock. "It's the oldest cliché in the book, but she just was an ordinary person." he added. "She wasn't carried away by her fame. Too many people, if they are on the box often enough, start to believe in their own publicity. It didn't happen to Jill." There was something vaguely incongruous about the appearance of Kate Adie, the hotshot reporter, being dispatched to Dando's street yesterday.

says. Boys like Ismail will need more than food, shelter and running water in the months ahead. There is a tendency to think of the Kosovan refugees as "safe" once they are at the "holding camps", run by non-government organisations. But children in particular have needs that go well beyond the physical.

They also have rights.
Disaffected boys could become a serious problem in the camps, believes David Shearer, an operations manager with the charity Save the Children UK, which is running projects in Macedo-nia and Albania.

"This isn't Africa. These people have had houses and cars and jobs," he says. "Now they've got nothing. It's only a matter of time before they become very politicised. The boys will be the biggest problem. If the KLA starts infiltrating, there could be dozens, even hundreds, slipping out of the camps at night."

Yesterday Save the Chil-dren launched a new campaign - Save the Children from Violence — demanding greater international protec-oon for children caught up in conflict. Some of the aims are global: the charity wants an end to the use of child soldiers; it wants children to have the chance to learn and play; and it wants children scnarated in conflict to be reunited with relatives from their own communities Two other aims are closer to home: it wants an end to the physical punishment of children and to tackle the poverty which the charity believes leads to violence. Most important of all, the organisers of the campaign want to jog us out of our collective complacency.

That children have rights beyond food and shelter was one of the basic beliefs of Eglantyne Jebb, the founder of Save the Children. She established the charity in 1919, after she witnessed the suffering of children in the aftermath of the Balkan War and the First World War. "Every war is a war against the child," she said afterwards. In 1923 she published a document called The Rights of the Child, which became enshrined in the 1989 United Nations convention on the rights of the child.

Among other things the convention guarantees chil-dren a good education, leisure activities and an adequate standard of living. These might be difficult to achieve in Africa, but when I accompanying Mike Aaronson, director-general of Save the Children, I assumed that these aims would be relatively easy to accomplish in Europe. Not so.

Yet every refugee child I spoke to mentioned school as the thing they really missed from their former lives. The charity has recruited 20 teachers from among the refugees, it has an education programme — but it has no tent in which to set up class.

or that it is reliant on the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the lead agency. The UNHCR is still struggling to provide tents for the influx of refugees, and appears to be facing obstruction from the Macedonian authorities.

Gazing round at the desolate faces in one of the smaller camps, Mike Aaronson says: "There's a lack of imagination being shown here. The Macedonians are being allowed to dictate what happens to these refugees. But these are people with certain rights. The Macedonian Government has signed all the conventions - it needs to be reassured that it won't be left with the burden."

However, turning the words of conventions into a reality in the lives of Kosovan refugees will take an act of will on the part of countries throughout Europe.

a simple waist measurement is all that is needed to assess obesity. Women should have a waist measurement of not more than 32in (80cm) and men 37in (94cm). As long as they keep within these parameters, they don't have to worry too much about having pudding. Doctors will start to get concerned about a female patient if her waist measure-ment reaches 35in (88cm) or a man has a waistband of 40in (102cm) or above.

Doctors good at mental arithmetic still like to work out the BMI (the body mass index), which is calculated by dividing the patient's weight in kilograms by his or her height in metres squared. If the BMI is more than 25, the patient has exceeded the recommended calculation and is considered overweight, if more than 30, he or she is technically obese and if the figure is more than 40, grossly obese.

Professor Michael Lean. Professor of Human Nutrition at Glasgow University. has written a book Clinical Handbook of Weight Management which, although it includes all the science of nutrition. is admirably concise and easy to understand. It is intended for health professionals but it would supply any interested lay person with the facts and figures behind any campaign to lose weight and explains the reasons why doctors are so concerned about excessive weight.

Professor Lean makes the being overweight may not be as life-threatening but can cause arthritic knees, less ofvery important point that in Western society the aspiration of the great majority of peo-ple, male and female, is to be ten hips, breathlessness, incon-tinence, infertility and menthin. Doctors confronted by a seriously overweight patient think in terms of the increased mortality from cardiovascular causes, in particular a rise in blood pressure which carries with it the greater likelihood of strokes, coronary thrombo-ses, an enlarged heart and

GEORGE WALDEN: MEMOIRS OF AN ANTI-POLITICIAN

The FO was worse than Yes, Minister

In the second extract from his memoir, George Walden describes the intricate euphemisms he had to learn as a diplomatic go-between

1979: MY FIRST day working for David Owen went as badly as it could. It began with a breakfast with the then deputy US Secretary of State, Warren Christopher, whom President Carter had dispatched to London to confer over one of the hottest issues of the day: the deloyment of the neutron bomb Europe. The attraction of the weapon, so to speak, was that it did more damage to mi-litary personnel than to buildings. As I told Christopher when we met again years later. after he had served as Clinton's first Secretary of State and I had become a polician, that though it was never to be deployed, the neutron bomb damned nearly did for me. The breakfast took place in the Foreign Secretary's official residence. Only Owen, Christopher and I were present. It was my first experience of working breakfasts and I was perhaps not as alert as I might have been. Though interested in their conversation, if only because my knowledge of nuclear affairs was so much less than theirs, I concentrated on the magnificent English breakfast - bacon and egg, mushrooms, tomatoes, kippers - a feast after my Parisian coffee and croissants. As the ex-changes, so technical they seemed to me to be encoded, went back and forth - Owen, a former minister at the MoD, seemed horribly expert on the details—it crossed my mind that instead of relying on memory. I should be making a note, so as to discover at my leisure what ALCMs, SLCMs and GLCMs and suchlike might be (air. submarine and groundlaunched cruise missiles). Dein such an intimate gathering would be impolite, I cocked an ear to the conversation while concentrating on my breakfast. Not understanding what the talk was about, recording it would also have been difficult.

After a couple of hours' intense conversation, Christopher went his way. I had enjoyed the meal, picked up use-ful knowledge and assumed that this was the end of my day's work. I was wrong. As Owen, in a hurry to get to his Plymouth constituency, stalked to the door, where his wife and children were waiting, he fired instructions at me till the moment he got into the car. The suggestion seemed to be that I should send a top-secret minute to the Prime Minister, over his name, reporting the conversation, which he clearly saw as important, that afternoon. He emphasised that the discussion was hypersensitive and that knowledge be restricted to a tiny circle: the Defence Secretary. Denis Healey, and a handful of nuclear specialists.

It was the worst afternoon of my diplomatic career. I was alone in the Foreign Office. 1 needed to talk to a nuclear expert, quickly, and on a secret line. I looked at my telephones. There were four, two of them studded with mysterious buttons; scramblers, I presumed. I thought of phoning Owen in of refining a few details, then remembered that whereas I had a scrambler I could not use, he was unlikely to have one at all. When I went for a pee in the Foreign Secretary's private lavatory (I hadn't discovered where our own were), I studied the antique plumbing for a long time, as if the answer to my predicament lay in the configuration of the pipes. f returned to find No 10 on the line, asking when the Prime Minister could expect a report of Owen's conversation.

Having discovered who was and was not in the charmed circle. called two experts I focused in. Between us we reconstructed the on the sort of conversation about the neutron great to have had with Christopher (the difbreakfast ficulty being that Owen was notorrather than ious for having his own ideas on policy). Eventually a the talks minute was duly > to No 10. I got home late that evening, fearful that my first contribution to serious diplomacy would bring about a transatiantic misunderstanding over nuclear weapons, and feeling faintly sick.

Under pressure you learn quickly, and there were few Foreign Secretaries capable of keeping the pressure as high as David Owen. Everything was done against the clock, and if you didn't stay cool you would go to pieces. The pressure on the private secretary came from two sides: ministers and diplomats. A policy

Once the Foreign Secretary had agreed - or altered - the line, sometimes after urgent meetings, you wrote a letter to the Prime Minster's diplomatic adviser in No 10 - at the time it was Bryan Cartledge:

IN 1980 Lord Carrington and I went to see Saddam Hussein. The Iran-Iraq War was raging and Baghdad bristled with weaponry. In the guest palace where we stayed a goodlooking female soldier sat at the end of our corridor, a sub-machinegun over her lap, like a male fantasy figure in a bad movie. In Saddam's outer office his assistants wore knives as well as pistols in their belts. As we were about to go in for our audience one of them signalled towards my briefcase. On no account could I take it into the meeting with the President, presumably since I clearly intended to blow up Saddanı. Carrington and myself. The more I argued, the more the tough guy insisted: the briefcase had to stay outside.

Under duress I acquiesced: there was nothing inside ex-cept my notepads and the spare toothbrush and extra pair of socks I had learnt to carry with me at all times.

The talks proved a memorable occasion, not for anything that was said but for the atmosphere in the room. In those years of continent-roaming I met some less than clean-living gentlemen: thuggish African generals, Galtieri-ish South Americans, drug-running Caribbean ministers, or dictators such as Ceausescu of Romania, the tic in whose left eye made you feel that, should someone mistake it for a command, heads might roll. Yet in terms of moviestyle villainy, the Iraqi President was the star. Meeting Saddam was like making a call on Bugsy Malone. He and his entourage looked and behaved like the sub-Chicago gangsters they have proved to be.

White is the colour of fear and there was no lack of it in the room. Saddam was dressed in white suit and silver tie, offset by a missile-sized cigar. When he smiled, teeth like bleached gravestones appeared beneath the macho moustache. The pallid complexion of his entourage's faces betrayed terror, for the President was in capricious mood. After the introductory affabilities he frowned complaining that the atmosphere in the room was stuffy - hardly surprising given the fug got up by his cigar. Instantly a minion leapt for a window and pawed at it fruitlessly: it was sealed tight, for security reasons. I presumed. The high point came at the end of the meeting, when there was an official photograph. The photographer, an Iraqi, lined us up round the still-sitting President. As he was about to take his snap the photographer paused, studying the Presideot nervily: he had noticed that Saddam's tie was askew and was woodering what to do about it. Finally, not daring to ask him to straighten it he put his camera aside, got down on his belly, crawled towards him and, while the mobster President smiled on, reached up beneath the white suit and tweaked the tie into place. After that scene nothing Saddam Hussein has said or done since has surprised me.

POWELL, BENN, FOOT

AS A NEW MP I watched the performances of many people on both sides of the House with awe. The least impressive, it seemed to me, were Enoch Powell Tony Benn and Michael Foot - seen then as the three great parliamenlarians of the time.

To them I listened with dislaste. What struck me was how much they had in common. All were burning patriots who had done precious linle for their country in their long parliamentary careers and, each in his way, a deal of Powell appealed to bigotry and was to find his spiritual home in the rancid politics of Northern freiand. Foot and Benn, contrary to right-wing belief, were no Marxists. Marxism demanding a degree of intellectual discipline. but self-indulgent patricians. All were essentially small men affecting the postures of great ones. All were fiery orators and intellectual mountebanks (Foot's book on H.G. Wells and Powell's cranky theories on the Gospels were laughed to scorn by expert critics). All were Europhobes and Americanophobes, stroppy Little Englanders who, in so far as they were known at all, enjoyed no status or respect beyond our shores.

All had quirky mannerisms passionate convictions, and none of them had judg-ment. Powell. Foot and Benn, I reflected as I watched their stagey orations and listened to their histrionic voices, commanded attention because they played oo Parliament's fatal nostalgia and its capacity to mistake the sedulously an-

Travelling with the Queen: "Never display natural human emotions, such as impatience or surprise"

A striptease that costs too much

The Tories' gyration to Hey Big

Spender is just embarrassing

f all the curious places in which poli-ticians now find themselves, whether on This Morning with Richard and Judy or a Thai massage parlour in Northampton, no location is as undignified as being "in the centre".

Where is this centre? It seems to be where the lowest common denominator and the highest possible public spending meet. And that is never the same place from one day to the next. The centre, like a dune in the desert, is a landmark that shifts as time, nature and the imprint of man do their work.

The centre certainly shifted between 1979 and 1990. First the Tory party, and then Britain, followed the foot-prints of one woman out of the wilderness.

Because it is not a settled habitation, the centre is, like the sands of the Sahara, an arid region where no principles can take root, no institution can be sure of its foundation, no banner can be firmly placed. For that reason, it is a particularly shameless place for politicians to be.

It is possible to be principled yet showy, and find oneself on daytime television. It is possible to be politically principled yet personally fallible and find oneself in an East Midlands jacuzzi with a lady of easy virtue. But it is no more possible to head for the centre and keep one's principles than it is to feel comfortable in a jacuzzi while fully clothed. The natural inhabitants of the centre are those politicians of easy virtue, happy to massage public opinion but never to challenge it.

In the past week, the Conservatives have attempted to shift towards the cen-tre, directed by their focus groups and ditching their ditching

Thatcherite clothing on the way. Last Tuesday Peter Lilley declared that Tories must "openly and emphatically accept that the free market has ing public services like health. education and welfare".

Really? As Lord Young, Mr Lilley's former colleague in Mrs Thatcher's Government, put it last Friday: "The only discipline that really works in the long run is the market. Any thought that any government can run public services without the stimulus of the market is self-delusion. Ask any Russian."

But the Conservatives prefer to ask their focus groups. They treat them as showgirls treat the audience in a lap-dancing bar, seeking approval by dis-carding their old garments. But they have tossed into the corner, like an unwanted brassiere, one of the last things that gave them solid support and kept them respectable.

They have forfeited fixed principles for fleeting anention. By admitting, as Mr Lilley did, that his speech was informed by "all the opinion polling evidence", he lost one of the few clear advantages the Tories had over Labour - the view that Conservatives were people of conviction and Blairites creatures of calculation.

Mr Lilley and his colleagues hope, however, that the real change in public perception will be the transformation of the Tories into the party of the public sector. To which one can only ask, has Mr Lilley heard of a man called John Major? The last Tory Prime Minister, a description which is beginning to sound like an epitaph, spent his entire premiership trying to make the Conservatives look like the public sector's sugar daddies.

From the unveiling of the Citizen's Charter to the election pledge to increase NHS spending above inflation, the Major administration sprayed cash at the public sector. Almost the first act of that Government was a public spending spree intended to show that it cared. And where did it all end? In tax increases.

The Tories did not lose in 1997 because they failed to emphasise their commitment to the public sector, they lost because they debauched the public finances in pursuit of the "centre ground" and added to the pain by clinging to another fad of the centre, the ERM. The Tories won the four elections before 1997, even though opinion polls suggested that Labour was more trusted on the public services. because the Conservatives be-lieved that small government and low taxes were superior to more government and higher taxes. Not just more popular but morally superior.

There are four types of spending. You can spend your own money on yourself. You can spend your own money on other people. You can spend other people's money on you. And, finally, you can spend other people's money on other people. Unsurprisingly.

the spender in the last category cares least about how the money is spent. This is, of course, how the State spends money. Which is why it was mistaken of William Hague to have argued in The Times last week seeming "uncaring" by supporting the state supply of taxpayer-funded services. If you measure "caring" by how much you take from the taxpayer to give to the public sector, then let's salute the biggest-hearted leader of 'em all, Uncle Joe Stalin.

overnments care, people do. By empowering people, as parents and patients, the services they care about im-prove. The Shadow Chancel-lor, Francis Maude, promised last night that he would spend as much as Gordon Brown on health and education, but would spend it better. I am sure he would. But not as well as freer citizens liberated by a smaller state. As Mr Maude pointed out last October, "it is always the soft option to accede to every apparently worthy spending lobby". It is indeed soft, and warm, to sink into the sands of the centre. But when the sands shift, where does that leave you? Unnoticed in the wilderness. Which is where the Tories will be until they once again explain why, and how, the State could be smaller.

STIFFENING THE PUBLIC'S RESOLVE ...

WILL SUCCEED ONLY IN ...

TO RESIST THE ... ER ... BOMBERS.

Welcome or be damned

our weeks ago, in a rant against the Nato bombing, I wrote that when it ended or if it didn't - we hawk nations would find ourselves with inescapable duties to Kosovan Albanians: protection, support, resettle-ment, I said that if we want to eroerge from this fiasco with any bonour at all, we will have to open our doors to the refugees whose doom we hastened, and smile as we do it. These are our people now, and we owe them.

"Come back to that theme," advised a drily roocking e-mail from Kent. "You'll need to. Have you read our local papers lately?" I looked up what she meant the famous Dover Express tirade about Romanian Corneles under the heading Gypsies, under the heading Scroungers Incorporated: "We want to wash the dross down the drain ... illegal immigrants, asylum-seekers ... while Labour luvvies drivel on, we are left with the backdraft of a nation's human sewage." My correspondent also directed me to the Folkestone Herald article alleging that "Slovak" prostitutes sell their bodies for the price of a potato: "The blouses are coming off as refugee 'potato patch dollies' are winning their own version of the war of the undie-

Local newspapers do not print such things for fun: they know their readership and get a lot of letters. In parts of Kent, windows have been smashed and walls daubed with "We will burn you out". It would be nice to think that things will be different for Kosovan families escaping from a widely televised hell; it would be comfortable to believe that the smashers and daubers represent only a tiny minority of yobs and that better-educated Britain will be uniformly generous towards the Kos-

But I wouldn't lay any large bets on it. Among my flood of correspondence lately has come a trickle along the lines of this, from a very prosperous address: You may moralise, Miss Purves. about our so-called 'duty' to refugees from this distant country whose people Nato is already trying bravely to help — but do we really want more of these women in head-scarves, stretching out their begging hands? Are sentimentalists like you aware of how unpleasant it is to shop in Knightsbridge, with this constant importuning by greedy foreign gypsies with their brats?"

Altogether, it was a relief to see

Kosovan refugees is shameful

the touching hand-made banner at Leeds-Bradford airport yesterday welcoming the planeload of Kosovans, and to hear how Yorkshire is donains, and to hear now to estitle is donaing toys and clothes. Sentimen-tal or not, the givers and flag-wavers are doing the right thing. In all the panic about logistics, nobody should lose sight of the importance of a visible, emotionally warm welcome to displaced people. Years ago I met an Auschwitz survivor who lost most of her family before she was 14. She seemed to have an extraordinarily optimistic outlook, and I ventured to ask why.

"I think," she said, "it is because when I came to Scotland in 1945, everybody was so good to us, so lov-ing. I understood very quickly that the Nazis were just bad, stupid people. Not normal." Her stories powerfully conveyed that sense of returning normality and faith: of the comfort of home-made loaves and knitted toys, her new red woolly gloves, the clumsy pats on the shoulder from strangers "who would shake their heads, with tears, so I knew they were crying for my people just as I did". It is not just professionals who can help the bewildered new arrivals: banners and soft toys count, too. We have to be wholehearted, arms wide, and resist xenophobic terrors. Like the United Nations and Amnesty International, I am not particularly impressed by the Brit-ish lead in this area. While Macedonia, virtually bankrupt, struggles to contain 140,000 refugees, the nation whose Prime Minister is the most hawkish voice in Nato has so far taken in 161. Meanwhile Germany has 10,000: Turkey 4,170: France 772; and Norway has already welcomed nearly ten times as many as Britain. Even Iceland beat us to it. Ministers respond defensively. Clare Short snaps that it is our duty "to look after them within the region and get them back to their homes as soon as possible". A Home Office spokesman smoothly says that mass evacuation would be "doing Milosevic's work for him". The failure so far of America - that vast, rich nation - to welcome one single refugee of its latest war is justified by the claim that it is too far away. Our aim is to help them go home."

Yet they are not going home, not for ages. Even if the undreamt-of breakthrough brings a peaceful new regime to Yugoslavia next week and miraculously con-verts the Serbian militia en masse to tolerance, much of Kosovo will not be fit to live in for years. The idea that it is sensible to keep hundreds of thoutrapped in mud, and squalor, and cold, and danger, and near-starvation just to avoid "doing Milosevic's work for him" is ridiculous. The party who ar-rived in Leeds had not eaten hot food or washed properly for a fortnight. The theory that this sad population must be kept physically close to its home is 50 years out of date. ft is not as if they had to migrate by ocean liner; this is not the Highland Clearances or the Spanish Civil War. These people have already done the hard bit of the journey. trudging across the mountains.

Three hours in an aeroplane seat would get them anywhere in Europe, and back again just as easily when (if) it is all over. A few more hours and they could be fed and comforted in Ohio or New England. If we can move bombs around to suit our "humanitarian" ideals, then we can damn well move some people around, too. The Macedonian Government begged us to weeks ago, as it tottered under the impact of an influx equivalent to one sixth of its population. "Don't send blankets," said its spokesman. "Send empty planes. Please. Fly them to Britain or America." It

Yet our Government continues to behave with an ambiguity that it is taking me all my self-control not to link directly to a political fear of the xenophobic daubers and letter-writ-ers. Despite the experience of Bosnia, it steadfastly refused the request froro refugee organisations to keep temporary reception centres "mothballed" — as the Germans do

- in case of such a crisis. It is four weeks into the war, but the two Leeds buildings now in use were found only on Friday. That does not suggest a commitment to compas-

And what about the long term? Refugee organisations say that even though nearly all arrivals want to go home, it is necessary to behave as they will not. After weeks in centres they need homes in the community, in "clusters" of families within easy reach of one another. Children must be found schools and adults taught English." If they do go back, brilliant, that's a start in a foreign language. But they must not live in limbo." said a Refugee Council spokeswoman. Of the 2,500 Bosnian refugees to Britain, she continued, almost all expressed a wish to go home, and the Government spoke of "a couple of months". So far only 200 have returned. Their homes no longer exist.

his is the reality of the situation, and it is one that Nato nations must accept with grace, reflecting perhaps that past refugee populations have immeasurably enriched the intellectual and commercial life of host nations. But even if that were not so, the bottom line is that as this war drags on, any policy that insists on keeping the refugees "in the region" is cruel and may prove downright murderous.

So there is no point in ministers acting all insulted when the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees criticises us; nor should UNHCR have to negotiate endlessly with picky governments on either side of the Atlantic about which category of refugees they will accept. We have an obligation. Government has to accept it, and accept also that some electors, whether Knightsbridge boulevardiers or pub fascists, won't like it. In the old army adage, if you can't take a joke. then you shouldn't have joined.

JASPER GERARD

'It is Scotland that binds the whole Union together. If Scotland becomes independent, it should take Ulster with it'

he elections in Scotland are feared by many to signal the beginning of the end of the Union, ushering in a new, unhappy political age: Balkanised Britain. Yet the dissolution of Britain will not be as bad as people think. It will be worse. because of one factor alarmingly absent from the current debate: the future of Ulster.

The reason is stunningly obvious. For without a Union, one cannot be a Unionist; if the concept of Britishness has been abolished, one cannot be British. A loyalist? Loyal to whom? The end of the Union will leave a million people in Ulster bereft not only of a state, but of a nation; propelled into a kind of ethnic vacuum. a pyschological no man's land.

So if Scotland does become independent, what will be done with Northern Ireland? There are four options.

A united Ireland would not be acceptable to Ulster Unionists and Dublin certainly would not relish the prospect of having to deal with a million volatile and unwilling new citizens of an enlarged Republic.

Alternatively, Northern Ireland might want to seek outright independence, an option mooted by William Craig's Vanguard movement in the 1970s. This has since gained little favour; shunned by a people whose attachment is to the Queen and everything British, not to a parochial Ulster statelet devoid of military protection from Lon-

Then again, Ulster could re-main in a rump United Kingdom of England, Wales and Northern Ireland. Such a preposterous political set-up would fail. It would founder on the rock of Ulster attitudes towards the if Scotland becomes independ-English. It is participation in a ent, it should take Ulster with it.

greater Britain, not an attenuated linkage with a littler England which sustains Unionists. Ulster folk, Protestant and Catholic, regarding the English as ignorant, capricious and reluctant upholders of the Union. The English certainly have no understanding of Unionists, whom they caricature as violent, perverse, bowler-hanted interpreters of Britishness.

Ulster's affiliation to the UK rests upon Scotland's participation. Ulster's most Unionist party, Ian Paisley's OUP, begins its conference not with Land of Hope and Glory but Scotland the Brave. Indeed, it is Scotland that binds the whole Union together. Which is is why a radical option should be mooted:

For Ulster Protestants, "the mainland" - literally and psychologically - begins at Stranraer. Six out of seven Ulster Protestants claim to be the descendants of Scottish settlers of the 17th century. Indeed, anyone who has walked down Belfast's Shankili Road will have observed the Cross of St George noticeably absent on murals: the Cross of St Andrew dominates. The UVF and the UDA are said to raise around £100,000 a year in Scotland, while the Orange Order is formidable in Caledonia, boasting 1,000 lodges and a reputed 80,000 members. And if soccer be the litmust test of national identity today, it is interesting to note the prevalence of two particular football kits on

Rangers and Glasgow Celtic are the Province's two biggest soccer teams. Most revealing of all, during last year's World Cup, most people in Ulster — both Catholic and Protestant cheered on the Scots rather than the English team.

Yet the most compelling rea-son why Scotland should take Ulster with it stems from the increasingly accepted notion popularised by Braveheart and Irvine Welsh's Trainspotting that Scotland was "colonised" by the English and therefore should seek national liberation.

This is a convenient fiction. Scotland prior to the Union of 1707 was a backward and impoverished land, eager to join England's prosperous empire-building project.

Self-serving Scottish talk of English colonisation actually masks a more authentic form of subjugation that occurred 300 years ago, when Ulster was patrickwest@newsint_co.uk overrun by thousands of Scottish settlers. Their sons still pay tribute to their ancestors, and their lost language of "Ulster-Scots". England never colonised Scotland. But Scotland did make a colony out of Ulster. So Scotland, when you go, take Ulster with you.

There may not be much chance of seeing an Ulster-Scots union, as there was in the 6th century when Dál Riala ruled a single kingdom that straddled the North Channel. Such a modest proposal would be derided as brutishly simplistic. But brutish simplicities are what you end up dealing in once you resort to the discourse of "colonialism".

The simple truth is that if the Union does collapse, in the name of "national liberation" then Ulster faces a future more brutish than any colonisation.

TROUBLED WATERS

The wrong symbolic gesture from Nato and the EU

Nato's leaders left Washington more united as to aims, but soll adrift as to means. Despite the best efforts of Tony Blair and Jacques Chirac, Bill Clinton cootinues to dither over the one decision that would impress Slobodan Milosevic and his generals, an order to mobilise Nato ground forces. The instruction to Nato commanders to revise their "assessment" of the options for ground troops sounds like, and is, disguised prevarication.

Whatever the impact of the intensified air campaign on which the Alliance is agreed, this delay makes oo military sense. Even under the best scenario, withdrawal by Belgrade of "all" its forces from Kosovo, Nato will need a much larger and better-armed force than it now has ready to go, because it can take nothing on trust. If Belgrade does not yield, Nato will have to push it out of Kosovo, and that demands deployment well before Kosovo's early autumn snows come to the Serbs' defence. Instead of drawing satisfaction from vesterday's apparently "brave" testing of the Serb political waters by Vuk Draskovic, the Yugoslav Deputy Prime Minister. therefore, the alert should be sounding in Nato headquarters. Nato is at risk of being caught humiliatingly unprepared, as Mr Milosevic will not have failed to note.

To this sin of omission, Nato leaders added one of commission — the utterly illiudged proclamation of a naval blockade to prevent oil flowing into Serbia via the Montenegrin port of Bar on the Adriatic. Nothing Nato has done since March 24 throws more doubt on the quality of its strategic thinking. The EU and Nato oil embargo on both Serbia and Montenegro is itself a mistake; the most likely consequence will be to deliver Montenegro's democratic and bravely neutral Government into Belgrade's power. A naval blockade is unthinkable. It would be illegal under international law; its impact on the Serbian purge of Kosovo would be marginal; and its political consequences would be little short of disastrous.

To stop a ship on the high seas is an act of war. That would be the legal implication of stopping, say, a Russian vessel. And Nato is pointing its guns at a phantom target. There have been dark references to Russian oil shipments to Serbia. But Russia has shipped nothing through land pipelines since the start of the Nato bombing campaign, and only insignificant amounts by sea. By far the largest quantities, including 65,000 barrels in a single Texaco shipment from British refineries, have been of EU and Nato origin. The folly of this move is that the Russian Government will now come under domestic pressure to put Nato to the test.

The US is wrong to claim that a blockade is justified by UN Security Council Resolution 1160 of 1998, which bans exports to Yugoslavia of "arms and related materiel of all types". The UN's oil-related sanctions were specifically lifted in 1995, following the Dayton accords. Wiser than its political masters, Nato's military committee yesterday conceded as much, announcing that its "visit and search" regime would not involve the use of force to stop non-Nato or EU vessels. But Nato still intends to challenge "third nation" vessels, to judge by its claim that their shippers will stay away because "no one likes to be stopped at sea by a warship".

Before real damage ensues, this loose talk must stop. Nato and the EU must also exempt Montenegro from their ban. The oil embargo is, as its Government claims, "a real catastrophe" for this already war-damaged economy flooded with Kosovan refugees; it could destroy President Djukanovic and drag Montenegro into the war. His case for neutrality crucially depends, in a country where loyalties are divided, on keeping daily life as oormal as possible. Of course there is a risk that some oil will reach the Yugoslav military, which gleefully used the excuse of Nato's blockade yesterday to order Montenegro to hand over its slender oil reserves. But set against Nato's claim to have destroyed 70 per cent of Yugoslav stocks as well as its two refineries, that seepage would be minimal. Other porous frontiers mean that Nato cannot squeeze every last drop of oil out of Serbia's supply lines. It should get back to concentrating on the central question: when, how and with what troops it is to prosecute the endgame against Belgrade.

FATE WORSE THAN DEBT

Simplistic gestures will not help developing nations

this moment? How can optimism be maintained at a time when anticlimax looms? The millennial mood creates a market for the grand proposal, for the great achievement to which a nation can point for reassurance. At this turning-point of time, people are particularly susceptible to the simplistic scheme, to the madcap proposal which captivates public enthusiasm. The campaign propagated by the faith-based Jubilee 2000 movement to eradicate Third World debt may be well-intentioned, but it amounts to just such a senselessly impulsive gesture.

This is not to imply that the issue of debt relief can be dismissed as the dream of idealists. Quite rightly, a privileged West feels uneasy about the poverty trap in which it watches underdeveloped nations flail, helplessly trapped by histories of financial mismanagement and irresponsible handouts. This week, as representatives from the G7 economic powers including the Chancellor, Gordon Brown, and the International Development Secretary Clare Short - gather in Washington. debt relief is deservedly occupying a prominent place in discussions.

But, as Ms Short noted in a welcome and tough-minded speech, the problems of the world's poorest countries cannot be solved by blanket cancellation of debt. Although initially such freedom would result in financial improvement, without accompanying development of sound economic policies it could only ever provide a

Where there is a pinnacle there is also a "tantalisingly short-term sense of progress. precipice. So, as expectations for a new Debt, after all, as any businessman knows, millennium mount, it is unsurprising that is not necessarily bad. Governments, like a sense of disquiet should also stir. What companies, must borrow to invest and exalted gesture can the West make to mark expand economically. Unless a country can prove itself capable of paying competitive rates of interest on a loan, it is unlikely ever to find a willing creditor again.

Highly Indebted Poor Countries (HIPCs) must continue to qualify, as they do now, for debt relief schemes. In acknowledgement of their efforts at reform, Uganda and Bolivia have had their financial burden eased. It would be poor reward for such nations should countries such as Sudan or the Democratic Republic of Congo be equally helped. Sudan may be among the world's most impoverished nations, yet its Government still chooses to spend most of its scant budget on arms. Congo is destroying itself in corruption and conflict. To forgive its debts at present would only result in yet more military spending and fatter overseas bank accounts in the names of a powerful minority.

The developing world demands measured wisdom from the West, not the grandiose gesture. It deserves respect, not patronising indulgence. Mr Brown has already outlined a plan to improve the situation of debt-burdened nations, including an increase in aid and the selling of International Monetary Fund gold to help to finance debt cuts. In answer to frequent accusations of irresponsible lending, he has committed Britain for two years to a policy whereby export credits will not be extended to HIPCs for non-productive expenditure. These solutions take time. The developing world's problems will take more than the stroke of a clock to solve.

LIFE IS A CABERNET

A little of what you fancy can do you good

Alcohol is apparently becoming the unexpected and fashionable health drink. While all brands of fresh orange juice and mineral water appear to have more or less the same sort of positive impact on health, regardless of which oranges have been squeezed, and from which well the water has sprung. The nutritional benefits of alcohol, in particular red wine, are the subject of a more advanced science. Red wine drinkers, well known as extremely sophisticated analysts, can now compare the invigorating qualities of specific grapes grown in different areas. The news today that a French cardiologist claims that cabernet sauvignon from the Gironde is one of the most effective wines at keeping arteries clear is another example of the growing recognition that, in moderation, alcohol can be good for you.

A few weeks ago, Safeway, with the help of the University of Glasgow, revealed that its Chilean cabernet sauvignon (Lontue region) and merlot may also help you live longer. The secret ingredient in this case is flavonols, and the more of them the better. Flavonols are anti-oxidants which may

University and the supermarket now have the flavonol ratings of no fewer than 65 red wines. So, flavonols may be about to be the next big thing for healthy enophiles.

Californians have gone a step further. Labels on some wine bottles encourage drinkers "to consult your family doctor about the health effects of wine consumption". Given the constraints of the NHS, it is unlikely that British GPs will find time to fully swot up on the flavonol and reservatol ratings of the local off-licence's offerings.

Some sceptics might seek to dismiss these nutritional revelations as a marketing ploy by wine-producers and supermarkets. Or they might point out, correctly. that large quantities of alcohol are distinctly disturbing. But the recognition that wine can be good for you should be welcomed as a small corrective against the numerous health scares which overshadow the good things in life. Alcohol has spent years out in the cold as a condemned drink. It is now time to acknowledge that whisky can have anti-coagulant qualities, that white wine can guard against shellfish bacteria, and that a glass or two of cabernet keep heart disease and cancer at bay. The a day may be just what the doctor orders.

From Dr David Green

Sir, William Hague's attempt to earn the trust of the people in health and education ("The NHS is safer in our hands", April 23) is deeply confused. Free marketeers accept that the State should guarantee universal access to health and education; but they also point out that maintaining access for rich and poor does not require the Government to own and manage all the schools and hospitals.

In healthcare the consequence of putting a national cash limit on spending appears to have been the delay, dilution and denial of care, exemplified by the premature death of thousands of cancer sufferers, re-ported in the same issue of The Times. In the heyday of Thatcherism the favourite remedy of free marketeers for state monopoly in education was the voucher, a system of finance that guaranteed all children the chance to go to a school chosen by their parents. In America vouchers are a reality. Publicly funded schemes have been established in Wisconsin and Ohio. with others planned, and privately funded voucher schemes are available in some 40 states.

New Labour has even made a small gesture in favour of competition and diversity by encouraging private man-agement of some schools. Yet, just as the case for competition is gaining wider acceptance, Mr Hague seems to have decided to be more left-wing than Labour.

Yours sincerely. DAVID GREEN (Director, Health and Welfare Unit), The Institute of Economic Affairs, 2 Lord North Street, SWIP 3LB. April 26.

From Mr M. R. W. G. Banks

Sir. Well done, Peter Lilley, in helping to guide the Conservative Party towards renewing public confidence in our commitment to public services such as education, health and welfare. These issues, together with sound monetary policy and good defence, are the bedrock of Conservative beliefs.

William Hague is right. The battles of the 1980s have been won. We must now look to the challenges of the 21st century.

Up to 1992 I campaigned in my constituency on a personal commitment to improve public services and the local environment within the lifetime of a Parliament. The prospect of winning back more such seats is consider-ably aided by William Hague's commitment to fight against the euro, as well as reaffirming the Conservative commitment to public services.

Yours faithfully, MATTHEW BANKS (Conservative MP for Southport, 1992-97), Gordon Castle, Fochabers, Morayshire IV32 7PQ. April 25.

From Mrs Christine Butler

Sir. As a lifelong Conservative supporter and former candidate, I am very distressed that I can no longer support the Conservative Party after Peter Lilley's mealy-mouthed betrayal. Surely a massive increase in public spending and taxes will alienate what few remaining supporters there are.

Yours faithfully, CHRISTINE BUTLER. SI Cavendish Avenue, Cambridge CB1 7UR. April 26.

From Mr Tim Huth

Sir. I was pleased to learn that the Conservatives may shortly return to One Nation "Heathite" policies. If so, I could be tempted back to that party after a 20-year sojourn with the SDP and Liberal Democrats. Congratulations Peter Lilley. Like Clause Four, needs must prevail.

Yours faithfully. TIM HUTH. 22 Bracklesham Road. Hayling Island POII 98J. timohut@clara.net April 25.

Tory commitment Nato strategy and stamina to succeed in Balkans

From Lieutenant-Colonel John Woodhouse (retd)

Sir. Nato targeted and hin the Serb TV station in Belgrade knowing it was on air and staffed by civilians. The deaths that resulted are surely not collateral damage but murder.

Yours faithfully, JOHN WOODHOUSE, Higher Melcombe, Melcombe Bingham, Dorchester, Dorset DT2 7PB. April 26.

From Mr S. Hnrry

Sir. I read with increasing disquiet the reports of what Nato considers a military target. The Geneva Conven-dons Act 1957 (amended 1995) of the UK specifically states that "civilians shall not be the object of attack" (sch 5, art 52.1) and also that "civilians shall enjoy protection unless they take a direct part in hostilities" (sch 6, art 13.3). The definition of a civilian can be simplified to persons not involved with either military or paramilitary groups. The targeting of a television broadcasting stadon, although arguably furthering Nato's objectives, was an intentional and premeditated attack on civilians.

submit that this attack has breached the terms of the Geneva Conventions and puts the Nato forces on the same moral ground as the Serbian leadership they are fighting against.

From Professor Geoffrey

Sir, There has been an excess of gloomy talk in the media about Nato having suffered a strategic defeat over Kosovo, to some extent mirrored in the febrile articles written by Simon Jenkins and the defeatist prose of William Rees-Mogg ("Keep out and stay out", April 19).

Why this urge to pass premature judgment on a complex military operation whose outcome has yet to be determined by events still unfolding? Is it driven by the strategic analysis of the likely outcome of the current conflict or by a palpable desire to appease

Surely the suspicion must be that the growing number of strategists have taken the easy way out in not having the starnina to stick with the brutal logic of applying graduated coercion on an adversary whose behaviour defies the standards and values by which Nato stands? Clearly, Nato has not yet suffered a strategic defeat and has at its disposal sufficient military means to prevent such a disastrous outcome.

Let us not heed the appeasers of Paris and Rome and refuse to listen to the lamentable intellectual heirs of Munich whose defeatism your elegantly expressed editorials have done so much to discredit.

Smack of authority

From Mrs Cornelia Oddie

Sir, In his letter (April 19) Roger Singleton of Barnardo's claims that according to a recent MORI poll 73 per cent of those asked supported law reform to protect children from physical assault, but did not wish parents to be criminalised for giving "trivial smacks".

Children are already protected by law from violent abuse by parents and others. Further legislation being campaigned for by the "Children are unbeatable" alliance is intended to stop all physical punishment of children by law and will thus criminalise good, non-violent parents who judge that a smack (or threatened smack) on the hand, leg or bottom may be appropriate corrective punishment for specified misdemeanours. Such proposed legislation not only diminishes the right of parents to judge how best to raise their children: more seriously still, it opens the way for state intervention into properly functioning families with the possible result that large numbers of children could be unjustly removed from their parents. The same reasonable-sounding arguments were used in Sweden. where there is no distinction in law between smacking and violent abuse, and parents may be imprisoned for a simple smack. The stated aim of Barnardo's in its booklet Why speak out against smacking? would appear to be to equate them in this country. Physical violence towards children is already illegal. Further legislation is aimed to outlaw trivial smacks and the MORI poll results show that most respondents are against this.

From Mr Michael Cayaghan-Pack

Sir. Like the Chief Executive of Barnardo's 1, 100, support "posiove discipline for children", but have sufficient respect for my children not to waste my time giving them "trivial smacks". I would certainly support law reform to protect children, but if that means criminalising effective smacking or spanking, then my support, and I am sure that of many parents, seriously weakens. To equate a soundly smacked bottom with a physical assault is gravely to trivialise child cruelty, and can only impede rather than advance the present campaign.

Yours faithfully, MICHAEL CAVAGHAN-PACK. The Manor House, Thurloxton, Taunton TA2 8RH. April 19.

Jill Dando, television presenter, died in Charing Cross Hospital, Loodon, yesterday aged 37, after sustaining fatal injuries outside her home in Fulham. She was born on November 9, 1961.

ALTHOUGH she always claimed to be mystified by the effect she had on the opposite sex — her nickname for herself was "Blando" — Jitt Dando in understated two-piece suit probably made more male hearts pound than many a televi-sion blonde of more lurid assets. It was the air of efficiency she brought to what she did — the efficiency of a ward sister or WPC - that set pulses racing as well as securing her the respect of her peers in broadcasting. lealous female newspaper columnists might he carry about her neat appearance, but it was the message as much as the medium that gave her undeniable strengths as a broadcaster. Such programmes as Crimewatch, on which she worked in harness with Nick Ross, require the ability to co-ordinate and present a vast amount of information in intelligible form, in an excitable studio atmosphere which is being continually bombarded with new data. And in an age when so many young women presenters aim to skate by on a diet of barely-literate burbling, "wows" and giggles. Dando brought to her job a fucidity which had, as in so many of the best television presenters; been learnt in print journal-

indeed, there were many who ieli that in advertising her latest job, presentiog BBC Television's Antiques Inspectors, by adopting the leather clad, look of a James Bond girl for the cover of Radio Times, she was selling herself short. Wholesomeness was, after all, no crime and Ms Dando had no need to be a selling herself all. need to be trying to follow in the sultry footsteps of a Honor Black-

Jill Dando was born in Weston-super-Mare, with a hole in the heart which was not discovered until she was 18 months old. An operación as Bristot Royal Infirmary corrected the condition and she was able to lead a normal life.

In Weston she attended Worle Comprehensive School and then Broadoak Sixth Form Centre where she became head girl. She left school to study journalism at South Glamorgan Institute of Higher Education, returning to her home lown for her first job, on the

which she joined in 1980.

There, she cut her teeth on the diet of council meetings, funerals and flower shows which is the lot of the local reporter, learning in the process the homely but necessary virtues of speed and accuracy.

In 1985 she moved to BBC Radio Devon where she presented the daily breakfast news programme and after a year there she was on the move again to BBC, Televisiun South West, to present an evening regional magazine programme.

This gave a much wider field for her talents and in 1988 she moved to London to present BBC TV's Breakfast News. From that moment on she was a household name throughout Britain, ber blonde good looks earning her the sobriquet "Golden Girl of Television". Professionally she became known as one of a not-so-large clutch of television presenters who are equally at home fronting news, light entertainment and travel programmes. She had soon added the Six O'Clock News in which she was a stand-in newscaster, Crimewatch and Holiday to her portfolio of broadcasting activities.

Holiday, with its unparalleled travel opportunities, was at the furthest remove imaginable from the local paper she had started on. But she was always to say that it was the more gruelling Crime-watch which was her favourite. When she had first been invited on to the programme, she had been cautious about becoming a television policewoman, and quizzed its first presenters, Nick Ross and Sue Cook, as to whether either of them had ever been threatened. She was later to say, possibly prophetically: "I was aware that standing up in public doing this job could mean I was putting myself in the firing line. Most people on the programme would rather not be, so

unwelcome attentions. Dando was involved, among many others, with Crimewatch programmes which shed light on the 1996 murders of Lin and Megan Russell and generated the telephone calls which led to the identification of Michael Stone, who was later jailed for life. Her own fortitude on camera was put to its stiffest test when she interviewed Danielle Cable, the 17-year-old fiancée of Steve Cameron, who was stabbed to death in a "road rage" attack on him on an M25 slipmad.

"At the end we both went off the set and burst into tears." she later !

In the meantime, the label "Golden Girl of Television" could, as she was soon to find, be as much of a liability as an asset. When, last autumn, it was rumoured that the BBC's Six O'Clock News was to be relaunched with her fronting it, there was a swift riposte, with veteran newscasters letting It be known that blondeness rather than gravitas and experience appeared to be the Corporation's criterion in Its thinking about the appointment.

The BBC dithered for several weeks. Eventually, angered about a handling of the matter which appeared to cast aspersions on her mental equipment. Dando declared that she would not be considered as a candidate in the circumstances. When the dust settled she found herself in a better position than before, with renewed contracts for Crimewatch and further travel series, as well as her latest show Antiques Investigator.

She was thought to be wanting to scale down her television activities since her recent engagement to a gynaecologist. Alan Farthing. They were to have been married in the

RONALD ALLEY

Ronald Alley. Keeper of the Modern Collection at the Tate Gallery, 1965-86, died on April 25 aged 73. He was born on March 12, 1926.

onald Alley spent 35 years at the Tate Gallery, becoming the first Keeper of its Modern Collection in 1965. When he arrived at the gallery, its holdings of modern art were still based firmly on the French Impressiturist paintings acquired in the 1920s through the Courtaulds. By the time he retired in 1986, e harmon he had nut unly immeasurably transformed the collections, helping in the process to turn the Tate into an important international museum of modern art, but had given an effective lead in introducing the 20th century to other art collections all over Britain. His achievements were recognised in a valedictory exhibition at the Tate in 1986. Furty Years of Modern Art. Educated at Bristul Grammar School. Ronald Edgar Alley was the son of a solicitor's clerk. During the Second World War he was a Bevin Boy. But he was also a born scholar, whose decisinn not to pursue a career in ornithology influenced by Professor Rudolf Wittkower of the Courtauld institute, the father of his closest friend, and by the later, and Keeper of the Modern Collection in 1965. At that time there was no between the British and modern collections, and the 20th century was barely represented at all. Alley was determined to make changes.

There weren't any realist or Surrealist works, or abstracts," he later recalled. "It was partly because the gallery had been starved and partly because most of our predecessors didn't like modern art."

He set about collecting con-temporary work and filling gaps in holdings of the 20thcentury avant garde, from the Fauves through informal ab-straction to Minimalism. In 1958 he saw an exhibition of paintings by Jackson Pollock and was immediately struck by their vivacity and tiriginality. He went to New York for the first time in 1960 and found a complete range of new work, returning not only very excited by it, but both sad and angry at the thought of "how stupid people had been in this country in missing the apportunity to acquire some of the new art for public collections. He wrote to all the public galleries in Britain in an attempt to compile a list of the national collection of 20th-century art, and was horrified by what he discovered. "There were only three Picassos, not one later than 1903, all small, and only about two Surrealist paintings in the whole lot put

He wrote an article in the Museums Journal - the Tate would not allow him to write it in a national newspaper for fear of offending other galleries - castigating in unminced words the absence from public collections of "a single painting or sculpture that occupies a key position in the development of 20th-century art".

curators as Roland Penrose and Herbert Read, and with the support of successive Tate directors Norman Reid and Alan Bowness, Alley was a key figure in countering the per-sistent British apathy to modern art. He found himself involved in some notable controversies, such as that surrounding Carl Andre's notorious "bricks". He was greatly gratified that the collection he began is now to be given its own museum, the Bankside

Along with such critics and

Alley wrote prodigiously. but his monument will he the two volumes of the Tate's catalogue of foreign modern art. He recounted that "on my second day after joining the Tate I was called into the office of Mr Le Roux Smith Le Roux, the deputy keeper". There he was "shown a very rudimentary typescript which was to become a catalogue," and asked if he would be good enough to take it away and look to see if there was anything to add. "I worked on it day and night for about ten years after that," he recalled. He was particularly a champitm of British contemporary work, of Graham Sutherland and of the St Ives artists. He was friendly with Barbara Hepworth, Ben Nicholson, and particularly Patrick Heron, and collected the paintings of William Scott. He was responsible for the majur retrospective of Hep-worth's work in 1968, and, with Sir John Rothenstein. wrote the catalogue raisonne for Francis Bacon as long ago as 1964. Before his last illness he was able to complete work on the current exhibition of 50 years of British art ftr the Cecil Higgins Gallery, Bed-ford, which runs until July.

Although Rothenstein was a mentor and the Tate director under whom he rose rapidly. Alky never quite forgave him for failing to buy Matisse's early The Red Studio when it was offered to the Tate for less than El,000. It would have been a fundamental key to the collection, and it was a mistake Alley himself was never able to remedy, though he did manage to acquire Matisse's The Snail. At the end of his career he believed that it was only in Matisse that the collection was still seriously wanting.

He was married to the painter and sculptor Anthea Oswell, whti died in 1993. Although they divorced in 1973, she retained a flat at the top of their riverside house in Putney, and he nursed her when she was dying. They remarried on her deathbed. Both their daughters, Fiannetta and Melissa, are painters and survive him.

WING COMMANDER DOUGLAS GRICE

Wing Commander Donglas Grice, MBE, DFC, fighter ace, died on March 24 aged 79. He was born on June 15, 1919.

AFTER joining No 32 Squad-ron while it was still flying biplane fighters in August 1938, Douglas Grice served with it for the rest of his career as an operational pilot, a period of intensive air fighting. After eight combat victories in the Battle of France and the Battle of Britain he was shot down in flames tin August 15, 1940, and did not fly on operations again.

A week or two after he had ioined No 32, the squadron exchanged its Gauntlets for Hurricanes, a transition which gave Grice not as many problems as some, since he had flown Magister monoplanes at his elementary flying training school at Woodley, near Reading.

When war came the squadron was ready to go and chafing at the bit. Flying from Biggin Hill, Grice and No 32 were soon in the thick of the action in the fierce air battles which raged unseen in the skies high over the British Expeditionary Force as it fought its way back to the sea. On May 18 Grice had his first taste of combat, and came away with a "probable" Mess-erschmitt 110. Next day there was no room for doubt when he brought down two Mel09s kills which were confirmed. The fullowing day he shot down another Mel09 and on the 22nd a fourth, giving him the satisfying tally of four kills in four days. By the time the Battle of France ended he was already an "ace" with five combat victories.

But this was not before he had been shot down once himself. On June 8. while he was attacking a formation of three Heinkel bomhers over northern France, he was hit by cannon fire. His glycol coolant tank was punctured and his engine stopped. Gliding down from 9,000 ft he selected a large field and put down in it. fervently hoping he was not in a part of France that had already been overrun by the Germans.

In fact, he had landed near Rouen, still just clear of the advancing German armies. Hot from his exertions and handed what he took to be a glass of water by the commanding officer of a neighbouring British artillery regiment, Grice gratefully gulped it down only to find himself gasping for breath as what was in fact marc — a colour-less grape spirit — made its fiery way down his throat. A few days later he was back at Biggin Hill ready to rejoin the air battle. Soon after his return he learnt that he had been awarded the DFC.

After a brief Juli the Battle of Britain began and Grice had further kills. He was shot down for the second time in July, while engaging a force of three Me109s over Deal. Electing not to bale out since he was over water, he gently guided his Hurricane back over land and put down in a field alongside Sandwich golf course. His final day of combat flying was August 15 when, after shooting down an Mel09, he received a hit in his fuel tank from an incendiary bullet. With his aircraft in flames he rolled it over, pushed his cockpit canopy loose and fell out.

He sustained quite severe burns but, as the plastic

Archibalo surgery pioneer MacIndoe was later to tell him, he was fortunate to have come down in the sea. "You're a lucky chap because you are going to look handsome without any help from me. Thanks to you and tithers we have discovered that a brine bath is the best treatment for a bad burns case."

After a spell in hospital Grice found that his nerve had gone for operational flying. However, he continued his career as a fighter controller and was lucky enough to be posted to Northolt where a WAAF officer, Pam Beecroft, whom he had long been wooing, was also posted as a cipher officer. They were married in October 1941. Grice spent the rest of the war in staff and fighter controller posts, retiring as a wing commander in 1947. He had been appointed MBE in 1946.

Thereafter he qualified as a solicitor, becoming a partner in the London firm McKenna & Co, where he specialised in construction industry cases. He finally retired in 1982 to enjoy his garden at Chalfont St Giles, Buckinghamshire,

His wife Pam died last year. He is survived by their son and daughter.

THE FUNERAL OF LORD BEACONSFIELD

The funeral of the Earl of Beaconsfield, solemnized yesterday on his own estate of Hughenden Manor, in the midst of the pleasant county of Buckinghamshire, with which he had an association so honourable and so enduring, was a touching and affecting spectacle.

On a green hill side there were collected a greater number, perhaps, of illustrious and well-known personages than ever assembled in one place in the open air so far away from the capital. The first impressive and unmistakable feature of the gathering was the unaffected regret, the sincere and evidently unexaggerated feeling of sorrow and admiration.

The Queeo had testified her regret and esteem in many ways, and among others by sending a wreath tif wild flowers, primroses plucked in the Isle of Wight. and such as he delighted to see blooming on the grassy banks of Hughenden Park. On a card affixed to this wreath was written, in Her Majesty's own handwriting, "His favourite flowers; from Osborne, a tribule of affection and regret from Queen Victoria".

It was expected that the great statesman would be accorded a public funeral. But he had directed that his funeral be simple. Protocol forbade the Queen from attending but later in the year she visited his grave.

When the hedge, which flanks a part of the garden had been passed, the way was bordered by the Buckinghamshire Volunteers in dark green uniform. Behind them stood, on the sloping sides of the path, several rows of spectators, all bare-headed, as those who walked in the procession also were. Men and boys had clamhered into the trees on each side to see over the rest of the people. The procession passed in silence into the churchyard, where many political personages, and others were collected.

Here the Wycomhe Volunteer Fire Brigade, clad in serviceable blue, kept the ground and preserved the graves from being trodden upon, although, in fact, but little was needed to restrain the throng, which was throughout, not orderly merely, but reverent. The well-kept graves, many planted with flowers, make the little God's acre look very sweet and lovable, like the Campo Santo in Rome, of which a hero of Lord Beaconsfield's said that it might make one in love with death to think one should he buried in so sweet a place.

Out of the sunlight the mourners passed into the obscurity of the church. Nearest the congregation were Mr Disraeli, gray-headed, but in other re-spects resembling his brother, and Mr Coningsby Disraeli; opposite were the Princes of the Royal House. On the vacant seat of the late Earl was laid a wreath of pardenias and maidenhead fern.

very Saturday (and. these days, Sunday) evening, supporters gather at overcrowded motorway service stadons and in draughty railway buffets to pore over the day's results, digest the consequences (often easier than digesting the food on offer) and work out how many places their team has risen or fallen. Fallen, more often than not.

The snatches of conversation overheard in such situations are the very stuff of football. "So if Bristol City don't win at Crewe on Tuesday, then that means." "...but don't forget that Port Vale play Bury on the last day ..." 'Oxford have played one game more than the others ..." And then it's back on to the Ml. or out on to the platform at Crewe. We've all been there and drunk the tea, Or tried to.

Entrants in The Times Fantasy League, however, can find out news that affects their teams in the comfort of their own homes. As the scores came in on television this weekend, Donald Henry, a resident of Leicestershire, noticed that a number of players in his Fantasy team, Havock, had enjoyed good days, and yesterday he learned that he had won the weekly prize of

although his true loyalties are to Aberdeen. Steve Stone, now with Aston Villa, and Carlton Palmer are the only Forest connections in his 40-point scorers, but there is a local connection: clean sheets against Liverpool and Coventry City meant that six points were contributed by Matt Elliott of Leicester City. "Another Scotsman," Mr Henry laughed. "It's funny when he's interviewed. There's not much brogue there."

David Ginola notched eight points, thanks to two goals and an assist. "Two goals in the last week, his only goals in the league. You get one bit of luck and it all comes your way." Mr Henry said.
The form of Nicolas Anelka was the best news of all: even though he was relegated to the bench for Arsenal's 5-I victory over Wimbledon last Monday, Anelka returned with a vengeance against Middlesbrough at the Riverside Stadium on Saturday.

He was fouled by Steve Vickers for the first goal. Marc Overmars putting away the penalty kick, he scored twice himself and gained a further assist. That's ten points to you, if you had the enigmade young Frenchman in your team. His award of PFA Young Player of the Year on top of all this might persuade him that his future lies at Highbury rather than on the bench at the Nou Camp.

Other points-scorers in the Havock team were Alan Wright (5), Mart Poom and Frank Leboeuf (3), Eyal Berkovic (2) and Steve Watson (I). Big Carlton and Darren Huckerby failed to trouble the scorers.

☐ Even if your team cannot match Mr Henry's 40 points, you still have a chance to win a cash prize in the ON-Target competition. If your team total based on the player lists (right) is II, 12 or 13, follow the instructions below and you could win £500.

☐ For legal reasons, The Times Fantasy League is no longer able to accept entries from players under 18 years of age. Players 17 years and under already registered in the main and youth leagues will, however, be allowed to remain in the competition.

Defenders beware of goal hunters his week, managers in Times Fantasy League found the secret of how to penetrate the Arsedefence. Wimhledon and Middlesbrough allowed the Gunoers a five and six-goal start respectively before both teams hit back with a consolation. This would be considered meaningless in Premiership terms, but it is all so important in the world of Fantasy League.

The end of the season usually provides us with a feast of goals. mid-table sides choosing to play flowing football rather than paying full attention to keeping clean sheets. In fact, the highestscoring weekend in Premiership history was oo the last weekend of the 1992/93 season, when an amazing 53 goals in 11 games were scored. Defenders beware!

The quest to become the top Fantasy League points scorer is also reaching its climax. With Michael Owen onable to add to his existing tally of 18 goals, Jimmy Floyd Hasselbaink, Andy Cole and Dwight Yorke are all hot on his heels.

However, there is no doubt regarding the identity of the most in-form striker. Kevin Campbell's return to Eogland has been marked with six goals and three assists in April for a mightly impressive 24 points.

With Francis Jeffers, his Evertoo strike partner, amassing 13 points in the same period, this duo represents the best possible Fantasy League strikeforce over Another successful recent arrival to the shores of England is Nwankwo Kanu, of Arsenal, who has cootributed three goals and two assists during the past week.

Together with Nicolas Anelka's two goals and two assists against Middlesbrough, these two proved that they provide a significant threat up froot for the Gunners, even without the presence of Dennis Bergkamp.

Carpetbaggers victorious as 62 per cent opt for conversion and possible £1,000

Bradford & Bingley members vote for windfalls

By Susan Emmett

MORE than three million savers and borrowers with the Bradford & Bingley Building Society are set to receive windfalls of up to £1,000 each after 62 per cent of members who voted opted for conversion to a stock market quoted bank.

The result, in which 63 per cent of the society's 2.5 million eligible voting members cast their vote, represents a resounding defeat for the society's board, which ran a £5m campaign promoting mutuality.

Savers and borrowers whose numbers swell to more than three million when children and other ineligible members are included - will, however, have to wait at least another year before they receive their windfalls.

Christopher chief executive, and a vociferous supporter of mutuality, said after yesterday's annual meeting that he would not be "When I stepping down. joined Bradford & Bingley, I thought it had great potential," he said. "I still think it has great potential."

But Stephen Major, the who put forward the pro-conversion resolution, said he would be withdrawing completely as he had no interest in becoming a member of the board. After the result he said: "I played it low key and kept out of the limelight. I think that is what swayed it."

The result - the first time a society's board has been defeated on a motion to convert raises questions over the fu-ture of other building societies.

Nationwide, the UK's largest building society, which has already defeated two motions to convert, remained defiant yesterday. It said: "It is by no means inevitable that other societies will have to convert. Bradford & Bingley didn't pursue any policy for keeping out potential windfall seekers."

Graham Leftwich, a spokesman for Britannia, said: "The decision is disappointing, but it is simply a poll of Bradford & Bingley members. It has no bearing on Britannia's fu-

David Anderson, chief executive of Yorkshire Building Society, said: "The vote suggests that Bradford & Bingley has attracted huge numbers of speculators over the past few years." He added that the result was not entirely surprising, given only large society that has been offering a possible windfall to new account holders.

One spokesman for a smaller building society, however, conceded: "As much as I hate to admit it, this vote means that carpetbagging will be back with a vengeance. People

What next for the remaining mutuals?

By Paula Hawkins

THE decision by the Bradford & Bingley to coovert to a quoted company will trigger a new wave of carpeibaggers seeking building socie-ty windfalls. But pickings are now film, with most of the big societies now requiring new members to sign away rights to any windfalls for at least five years.

Nationwide: Having survived a conversion vote last be made to hold another until after its 2001 AGM. New accounts can be opened, but new members must sign away windfall rights. Britannia: The serial carpetbagger Michael Hardern has withdrawn from stand-

G7 in turmoil over plans for financial crises

FROM ANATOLE KALETSKY IN WASHINGTON

SERIOUS differences yesterday emerged between leading industrial countries over plans to prevent crises in the world monetary system and to help developing countries to cope with the recent financial Finance ministers and central bankers from the G7 countries yesterday expressed general satisfaction about the prospects for the world economy. but behind the scenes there were serious disagreements between America, the euro coun-tries and Britain over detailed proposals to cope with emerging market financial crises. Joseph Stiglitz, the World

Bank's chief economist, gave warning that the true costs of the recent financial turmoil have not yet emerged. Estimates of the number of people living in extreme poverty in Indonesia have more than doubled over the past two years, while estimates of the number of people living in extreme poverty in the states of the former Soviet Union has risen from 14 million in 1989 to 147 million before the latest Russian financial crisis.

James Wolfensohn, President of the World Bank, also criticised the G7 for proclaiming apparently generous schemes for debt relief to poor developing countries, while failing to agree on how these schemes would be financed.

The problem of Europe's representation in the G7 after monetary union was again raised, with US officials maintaining that euroland countries cannot be represented at G7 meetings by their national central bankers and by the President of the European Central Bank.

CRS to cut 3,000 PROFITS jobs as buying power is merged

By Fraser Nelson

MORE than 3,000 jobs are to go as part of a radical shakeup in the Co-operative Retail Society, which is to merge its buying power with the Co-op-erative Wholesale Society in a £4.5 billion deal.

Andy Mechan, CRS chief executive, has sold its ten Homeworld furniture store buildings and 46 Living department stores for £149 million in cash. Every outlet is to be closed. Kingfisher, the Woolworths to Comet retailer, is buying the Homeworld buildings for £80.4 million. Miller Developments, a Scottish construction company, is paying £69 million for the "Living" department stores.

The deal will reduce the CRS to a chain of 469 grocery stores. Mr Meehan has pooled its £1.2 billion of buying power into the CRTG, a buying alliance organised by the CWS, which orders £3.3 billion of goods each year. The move will effectively create the fifth-largest force in British food retailing - with more buying power than William Morrison. Iceland or the recently merged Somerfield and Kwik Save.

Mr Mechan, who joined the CRS five months ago with a brief to shake it up, has decided to ditch the "Co-operative" brand under which the CRS has been selling its own-label food for the past two years. It will instead use the traditional "Co-op" brand, produced by the CWS, which now runs 640 of its own stores.

Industry observers believe the decision to merge the foodbuying and marketing departments could be the first step towards a full merger between the CRS and CWS.

Nomura unrest clouded Park's departure

A WHISPERING campaign and a clampdown on bonuses at Nomura International were part of the volatile mix that led to last week's abrupt departure of Mungo Park, the Japanese bank's head of technology and healthcare.

Mr Park's enemies at Nomura, including Kevin Sara, head of technology, alleged that the bank was losing business because of Mr Park's controversial past. Mr Park was accused by the Serious Fraud Office of conspiring fraudulently to induce investments though he was formally acquitted of the charges in 1993. Pieter Muli-er, a top salesman who left Nomura a year ago after a fierce disagreement with Mr Park, compiled a dossier on these and other allegations that was shown to Kozo Yamazoe, head of corporate finance, and the firm's compliance department. Mr Yamazoe was initially satisfied that Mr Park had fully disclosed his past problems when joining Nomura.

However, Mr Sara continued to press the issue, concerned that someone with Mr Park's reputation was running a team that embraced sales, tradlion proprietary investment book - raising complex compliance problems. Tensions at Nomura were heightened by a clampdown on bonuses this year. Colleagues say Mr Sara was unhappy with his bonus, be-lieved to be about £150,000 after tax.

The bonus clampdown, stemming from the Japanese parent company's £2 billion losses last year, is said to have prompted the recent departure of Nick Knight, the well-known strategist who is thought to have made about £15 million profit for the firm last year. Nomura International, the London arm, also suffered a big loss. much of it on Russian bonds. Several of last year's technology issues have performed badly, notably Union Technology, an Italian computer company floated in France.

A Nomura spokeswoman said yesterday that Mr Park had been given a clean bill of health by the Securities and Futures Authority.

In a recent reorganisation at Nomura. Mr Park lost responsibility for the "BBFB" - the biotech bottom-fishing book, the portfolio of large holdings in biotech companies that he initiated. Mr Park's departure has called into question Nomura's commitment to the biotechnology sector and to its stakes, of up to 25 per cent, in many loss-making biotech firms. The BBFB is currently showing a profit of about £20 million on investments that cost some £35 million. One Nomura insider insisted that the bank remained committed to the BBFB, and would respond aggressively to any attempt to drive share prices lower.

relations work for them but Global Crossing is one that can, The business, which has just agreed to pay £550 million for Cable & Wireless's Global Marine Division, is a company with connections. And in telecommunications, where commerce and poliocs tend to be intertwined, connections can be all important.

Global Crossing launched on the New York stock market last summer with its shares valued at $19. An initial lack of enthusiasm saw them drift down as low as $8, but yesterday they were up to almost $57.

This will be cheering news for ex-President George Bush. Last year he did the company the favour of flying to Tokyo to explain what an excellent outfit it was. His reward came in the form of $80,000 worth of shares. They are now worth more than $15 million. Not a bad fee for a man hardly renowned for his oratory. Mr Bush may now be volunteering to knock on a few more international doors for Global Crossing. But the company could probably call on the services of a raft of high-profile people to sing its praises.

The secret is in the identity of its co-chairman, Lod Cook. He was formerly the chairman of oil company Arco, recently swal-lowed into the giant BPAmoco combine, and is a man whose gold-plated address book makes things happen. And not just in the United States, where his Re-publican allegiances have not precluded invitations to the Clin-ton White House.

Good works on a grand scale earned him an honorary KBE from Prince Charles. At Arco, he would host an annual dinner in London which top names from politics and industry would not miss. The last one, however, was no longer staged under the aus-pices of Arco: Global Crossing picked up the bill for the glittering evening. This was clearly a young company with grand ambitions.

They have not taken long to materialise. In February, the company enrolled AT&T's Bob Annunziata as chief executive and snapped up a US telecoms company, Frontier. Today, it is valued at $23.3 billion.

This has made Mr Cook's take of just our large continuation.

Rodrigues does swift pirouette

onverting the Bradford & Bingley from building so-ciety to bank will take at least a year. The conversion of Christopher Rodrigues had to be accomplished rather more speedity. Yesterday morning he was a wehement supporter of mutuali-ty. By yesterday evening he was coming round to the idea that B&B plc might not be such a bad thing. He could envisage being chief executive of such an entity without feeling that his princi-ples were being compromised.

His members' principles were all too clear, however. They put more value on cash in the hand than the more amorphous benefits of mutuality. When interest rates are down to current levels, the slightly more generous attitudes of the mutuals amount to little in pounds and pence; cer-tainly not enough to leave savers or borrowers convinced that mutuality is worth preserving. It was B&B members who pushed the society into the demutualisa-tion vote and they were more in touch with the prevailing mood than was Mr Rodrigues.

But he is not the child of a brace of ballet dancers for noth-ing. Executing a swift pirouette, he is now devising plans for a demutualised B&B as a "customer-

As a big idea, this is not revolutionary. Financial services businesses have spouted more than the fountains at Versailles about the need to be customer-focused. in theory, they all believe that this must be the way to earn long-term profits.

Yet when it comes to putting this theory into practice, far too often they opt for short-term profits over long-term customer loyalty. Northern Rock provided the most glaring example when, having forsaken its mutual status, it proceeded to juggle its customers funds into accounts that distinctly disadvantaged them. The subsequent slow climb down was an unedifying sight.

If Mr Rodrigues can ensure that B&B plc hangs on to some of the warm glow of mutuality in its relations with its customers, he may have a recipe for growing the business. Shareholders, how-ever, do impose new disciplines, and while they, too, might claim to understand the virtues of being customer-led, they have a nasty tendency to be profit driven.

The carpetbagging mentality is not confined to members of build-ing societies or motoring organi-sations: institutional investors have the same tendencies. Once B&B is floated and they have their shares, a swift takeover is probably what they would most like to see.

It really can be all at the Co-op now hen Andrew Regan made his ill-fated at-tempt to take over the CWS, his reasoning was sound: this was a business that deserved to be broken up. The problem was in the execution. Now there are suggestions that a cash-packed United States venture capital organisation is ready to try to succeed where he failed, with a £2 billion bid.

But the signs are that the Co-op may at last be deciding on the sort of remedial action that might make it deserving of a future. A merger between the CWS and the CRS is the sensible way forward for what used so proudly to be known as "the movement" (and. yes, there are smaller co-operative societies that still thrive but, for the purposes of this argument, it is the CRS and the CWS that now constitute TGMOO—this great movement of ours.)

They have not yet agreed to a fully fledged get-together. Given the fiercely fought objections to that in the past, it would be too abrupt a change. But after effectively putting the buying departments into one, it cannot be too long before the selling sides of the long before the selling sides of the organisations realise the good sense of a full-blooded merger.

Then the organisation would be well placed to fight for its place in the grocery business. competing alongside Somerfield Kwiksave and the like. It may take a little while yet but the arcane structure of the Co-op probably means that even the most im-aginative of US bidders will have to sit back and watch.

No token choice

UNDER the Government's new sleaze-bearing policy, the Bank of England has to advertise for directors. Yet the Chancellor's appointments to the MPC remain shrouded in the mists of patron-age. That invites a cynical view that, having gathered a woman member and a euroland national, right-on Gordon Brown has added an ethnic Asian. Sushil Wadhwani's repute suggests, on the contrary that we are lucky a youngish family man has made so much money in hedge funds that he can afford to take the job.

GEC launches $4.5bn bid for Internet business

By CARL MORTISHED, INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS EDITOR

GEC has launched a takeover of Fore Systems, offering to pay $4.5 billion (£2.8 billion) for the US company that specialises in the manufacture of Internet switching equipment.

Shares of the UK electronics group gained 291/2p to 6081/2p, as the market welcomed evidence that GEC was putting flesh on the bones of its strategy to expand in telecoms.

C&W's disposal fetches £550m

By RAYMOND SNODDY MEDIA EDITOR

CABLE & WIRELESS, the international telecommunications group, yesterday continued its programme nf disposals with the £550 million sale of its Global Marine business to Global Crossing (See Commentary, this page).
Global Marine installs

and maintains submarine telecom cable systems. Itssale is the first disposal since Graham Wallace took over as C&W chief executive and is a further sign that the company is concentrating on the operation of communication networks including

The deal also means that since C&W first announced a disposal programme in November 1997, about £1.2 billion has been raised. That total does not include the sale of a 20 per cent stake in Bouygues Telecom, expected to fetch more than £500 The market reacted positively to the sale and C&W closed 67p up at 909p. Under the deal Global Crossing, which is building an advanced fibre-optic telecommunications network spanning four continents. will pay C&W £450 million in cash and take on £100 million in third-party debt. As part of the sale agreement. C&W will have a continuing relationship with Global Crossing for the installation and maintenance of its cables.

GEC's offer, priced at 76 times the earnings of Fore Systems. also provided support yesterday for the recent spurt in telecoms and Internet stocks.

Based in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Fore Systems makes networking equipment for large companies, as well as telecom and Internet service providers. Its biggest product, the AX4000 switch, enables data to be transferred down telephone wires, and some 70 per cent of all Internet traffic is reckoned to pass through Fore Systems's products. The company's stock price has soared from $13 per share over the past month because of takeover speculation. GEC is bidding $35 per share for the company, a premium of 43 per cent to Friday's closing price. Net of cash balances, the cost to GEC will be $4.2 billion and Lord Simpson of Dunkeld, chief executive, admitted that it was not cheap, "It is the price of the technology and an annual growth rate of 30 to 35 per cent," he explained.

"We will now be in a position to capture the benefits of the impact of the growth of Internet and other data traffic on the demand for communicaoons equipment and systems." The bid follows last month's acquisition of Reltec, a network products company, for $2.1 billion. GEC is keen to ally its existing telecoms equipment business, largely based on voice communication, with data communicadon products in an attempt to compete in the same markets as Lucent, its main competitor.

Lord Simpson added: "Fore Systems give us a similar footprint in terros of technology but we have a long way to catch up in sales. Our job now ts to drive the organic growth."

Fore Systems was set up just nine years ago. In the year to last March it had revenues of $632 million and operating income before interest and tax of $55.4 million.

Products include asynchronous transfer mode, Internet protocol, gigabit ethernet and firewall switches but the company is also known for having helped to create the special efferts for the film Rabe Fore Systems's clients include NASA, the US Government, the US Department of Defense, service providers such as AT&T, Bell Atlantic. Deutsche Telekom and large corporates, including Boeing, Ford, Microsoft, Shell and Unisys.

First Leisure poised for break-up

By Dominic Walsh

MICHAEL GRADE, the former Channel 4 boss, appears to have thrown in the towel in bis bid to repeat his success in the leisure arena. First Leisure, where he has been chief executive since 1997, yesterday admitted it was in talks to demerge its health and fitness business and sell it to Cannons Group in what appears to be the first stage of a break-up of the group. First Leisure issued a statement confirming that it was a discussing an all-share merger between Cannons and its own health and fitness business. It said: "Such a merger would be effected through a separation of First Leisure's health and fitness business, and by Cannons issuing shares directly to First Leisure's shareholders." Cannons, which is headed by Nick Irens, chairman, and Harm Tegelaars. chief executive, is effectively acquiring a business which operates 20 clubs, mainly under the Riverside and Esporta brands.

Neither company would elaborate, emphasising that the talks had "not yet reached a conclusion", although analysts believe it could double Cannons in size to between £500 million and £600 million.

First Leisure, which also operates bars. nightclubs and bowling centres, fuelled speculation of an eventual break-up by saying it continued to explore "other stra-tegic initiatives for the rest of the group".

Merging holiday firms' chiefs to share millions

DIRECTORS of First Choice Holidays and Kuoni of Switzerland are to share several million pounds after the two companies announced a slimmer and completely reshaped board ahead of their planned

The board of the enlarged Kuoni Holdings was to have been led by lan Clubb, of First Choice, as executive chairman and Riccardo Gullotti, of the Swiss group, as chief executive. The reshaped board unveiled in the formal merger document posted to shareholders vesterday has just six executives and four non-executives.

Peter Diethelm, head of Kuoni UK, is to continue in his British role, but will not now join the board. He has already received £4 million to buy him out of a profit share scheme. Three other Kuoni executives will each receive £730,000 for agreeing to waive their rights compensation under a change of control clause.

Mr Clubb said a 14-strong board would have been too unwieldy. He said that he and Mr Gullotti had planned to step down after two years, with Mr Long due to succeed Mr Gullotti: "We decided it would be better to do it now."

Takeover failure hits Jarvis

SHARES of Jarvis Hotels fell by 20p to 139p yesterday after the group announced that takeover talks with an unnamed party - widely be-lieved to have been NH Hoteles of Spain - have been terminated (Dominic Walsh

Analysts believe that the three-star operator is still seeking a buyer. There were also suggestions that if its share price remains depressed, the management might seek to take the company private. Since flotation in 1996 the shares have rarely reached anywhere near its 175p launch price.

Sources close to Jarvis emphasised that the discus-sions with NH had been highly tentative, and had never progressed as far as due diligence.

By RAYMOND SNODDY, MEDIA EDITOR

JCDECAUX, the privately owned French group, yesterday claimed to have become the world's largest owner of "out of home" advertising after the £652 million acquisioon of Havas Communicacions-Outdoor Advertising.

Jean-François Decaux, chief executive of the company founded by his father in 1964, said yesterday the deal meant that JCDecaux now has more than 350,000 advertising structures in 31 countries.

Until now the group has been founded almost enorely on providing bus shelters for local authorities in return for the advertising space. The acquisition of the Havas outdoor advertising group which includes Mills & Allen in the UK, will add convencional outdoor billboards as well as advertising on buses and in airports.

The acquisioon, hotly con-tested by Clear Channel and OSI of the US, will give JC-Decaux annual revenues of about £800 million.

M Decaux said the company also hoped to float in London and New York through an initial public offering in the next couple of years. The company may also expand into mainstream media. "We will be looking at radio and, or, television," M Decaux said.

The media world is taking outdoor advertising more seriously as the fragmentation of television audiences and the rise of the Internet makes it more difficult to reach homes. Separately, reports that Carl-

ator, yesterday forecast further strong price rises on the back of reduced competition in the cross-Channel transport.

The company said that de-spite sharp rises in the past year, prices for passenger and freight transport were significantly lower than five years ago. This was when Eurotun-nel entered the market, leading to substantial excess capacity and a heavy price slump.

However, the creation in March last year of P&O Stena. 60 per cent owned by P&O and 40 per cent by Stena, the Swedish ferry group, cut competi-tion on its two routes. Analysts believe that prices have risen by at least 15 per cent for freight and 20 per cent for passengers in the past year.

The joint venture said yesterday that it had made a headline profit of £3.5 million in the three months to March. However, it had also incurred a £10.4 million charge on closing its lossmaking Newhaven/ Dieppe route on January 31.

Rate cuts aid Boot

Henry Boot, the construction group, said reservations for its property developments have been "significantly buoyed" by interest rate cuts and lower in-flation, but orders for houses in its construction division are down as a result of competition and a drop in public sector contracts because of more governmental emphasis on Private Finance Initiative schemes. Boot's 1998 pre-tax profits rose 5 per cent, to £10.6 million, on turnover up 6 per cent. to £172.1 million. Earnings per share rose 7 per cent to 29.1p. A 6.6p final dividend makes 9.1p. up 7 per cent.

BATM, the Israeli telecoms equipment maker, said "a multinational corporation had signed a "non-binding letter of intent" to buy up to 9.9 per cent of it. Speculation that BATM may be bought by Cis-co Systems, 3M or IBM lifted its shares 12 per cent to 585p. against 145/ap last year. Pretax profits more than doubled last year, to £2.25 million, on sales of £11.2 million, up 71 per cent. There is a 31.2p final divi-Tempus, page 30

Telecom deals boo confidence in FTS

IT IS not often that London is able to ignore the strong influences across the pond on Wall Street. But that is exactly what happened yesterday as investors got the week off to a flying start in the City fuelled by a welter of corporate deals in the telecoms sector

The FTSE 100 index finished 75.6 up at 6,503.6. having briefly touched a high for the day of 6,521.9.

Gains among second-liners were less spectacular with the FTSE 250 index rising just 4.1 at 5.788.6. as total turnover reached 972 million shares.

By contrast, the Dow Jones industrial average had reversed an opening gain of almost 40 points by the ome business in the Square Mile drew to a close.

WH Smith, where Richard Handover is chief executive, was a strong market, adding 38p to 7784 p ahead of results on Thursday as the group announced de-tails of the launch today of its Internet service. BT Alex Brown, the broker, forecasts a drop in interim pre-tax profits from £128 million to £89 million.

Marks & Spencer came back 6p to 4484p with dealers expressing scepticism about recent reports that Warren Buffett, the financier, had built up a 3 per cent stake.

Recent excitement in shares of Tesco show signs of boiling over with the price finishing 5p lower at 1904p. Morgan Stanley Dean Witter, the US securities house, has cut its recommendadon on the shares from "strong buy" to "market perform". But it has raised its target price from 195p to 215p.

British American Tobacco shaded 5p to 4871/2p despite Merrill Lynch, the broker, upgrading its recommendation for the shares from "accumulate" to "buy". It has made its move to reflect the completion of the merg-er with Rothmans, due some time next month, and an improv-

The breakdown in bid talks left Jarvis Hotels nursing a fall of 20p at 139p, after briefly touching 121p. One market-maker is known to have paid 135p for 100,000 shares, sparking suggestions that another bidder may be waiting in the wings. The talks carried on for more than a month with NH the most likely suitor. Fresh support was shown for other hotel operators with Ladbroke up 74p at 3184p, Hano-

THERE was no shortage of buyers for the telecoms sector amid evidence of further consolidation in the industry. Telewest rose 141/2p to 2974p, while bid hopes bolstered Orange 3p to 844p.

British Telecom, up 53p at £10.47, is poised to spend £1.2 billion along with AT&T acquiring a 30 per cent stake in Japan Telecom, that country's thirdlargest operator. This comes hard on the beels of last week's proposed mergkom and Telecom Italia.

Meanwhile, Cable & Wireless, up 67p at 909p. is selling its global-marine division, which lays fibreop-tic cable under the sea, to Global Crossing of the US for £550 million.

Brokers say GEC's acquisition of Fore Systems, the Pittsburgh-based Internet switching-systems specialist, for $35 a share also takes it another step towards being listed as a telecoms supplier. That would lead to an automatic revaluer between Deutsche Tele- ation of the shares, up 29½p

ment maker? Judging by the price GEC is pay-ing for Fore Systems of the US, there is almost as much capital growth hope in the latter as there is in the former. GEC is paying a 43 per cent premium to buy Fore - and this comes against a backdrop that saw Fore shares almost double in value over the past month as speculation mounted that it would become subject of a bid.

GEC is certainly paying an exorbitant price - the sales multiple is 6.6 times and the mulople to earnings for the year to March 1999 is 76 times. But this is the going rate. In reality. GEC has little choice but to pay up if it wants to play in the big league in a market that includes companies such as Northern Telecom and Ericsson. It has advertised itself as cash

For GEC's, and their investors', point of view, consolation comes because for an Internet-related story Fore's markets have a comforting connection with reality. Fore even generates a profit. That may be only $55 million on $632 million of sales, but Fore is growing at a spectacular rate. Sales were up 35 per cent last year. These are tangible products with tangible profit potential. Buy into equipment makers, not sevice providers. Buy new GEC.

BATM Advanced Communications is much like Fore, the US company bought yester-day by GEC, although it operates on a much smaller scale. BATM manufactures switching devices that shift information quickly and efficiently around the Internet.

BATM may also follow Fore into the hands of a bidder. Yesterday BATM admitted said that "a multinational corporation" had agreed to take a 4.5 per cent stake in the company with the option of increasing this stake to 9.9 per cent in the future. The buyer is likely to be either Cisco or 3M, or even IBM, which supplies many of BATM's prod-ucts alongside its own. BATM, meanwhile, reported impressive annual results and the shares added 12 per cent to close at 585p to trade at an astonishing 82 times earnings. Tempus recommended the shares be bought last October, when the price was 162p. Investors will be forgiven for wanting to take pmfits since then. After all, the company's success rests with a handful of newly developed products, which have yet to prove themselves in a hugely competitive market.

Yet while the best may be in the past there may be more to come here. BATM shares, currendy listed on AIM, will join the main market soon. This will make the stock available to a new batch of fund managers, hungry for credible inter-

BATM shares should also receive a boost when the idenoty of its multinational iovestor is made clear. Buy.

Biotechs

THE biotechnology sector seems to have shrugged off the departure of Mungo Park from Nomura International. Mr Park established what was known as the biotech bottom-fishing book, or BBFB. The bank acquired large stakes in eight or nine companies, and is believed to have smaller holdings in many more. It pitted Nomura's judgment on smaller biotech shares against the market's. The approach also produced some spectactular successes. Phytopharm, bought for less than 45p in late 1997, is now at 241p: Xenova, backed at 55p last autumn, is now at 106p. The fear is Mr Park's exit will turn Nomura from biotech bull to biotech bear. After all, cynics say, taking a 10 per cent stake in a weak company is an expensive and risky way of attracting corpoadvisory business. Nomura insists, as it would, that it remains committed to the emerging healthcare sector and that BBFB has the funds to take on short-sellers.

Time will tell. But despite the fact that the market has taken Mr Park's departure in its stride, investors need to look at the smaller players with renewed caudon.

Meanwhile, the bigger companies, where Nomura's influence is much less important, look increasingly solid. Celltech and Chiroscience show particular promise.

First Leisure

EGO-MASSAGING semantics aside, Cannons is acquiring the fitness business of First Leisure. First Leisure also says it continues to investigate "strategic initiatives" for its two other businesses: bars and nightclubs, and tenpin bowling.

Whilst this could mean that it hopes to enlarge these businesses through acquisi-tions, it is more likely that a full-scale break-up of First Leisure is now in the offing. And who would have thought that two years ago when Michael Grade, with an enviable track record at Channel 4 behind him, took the reins?

The subsequent exit from bingo and resorts looked sensible, taking the group out of mature businesses and giving it money to expand in more go-go areas. But a downturn in two of those three continuing divisions meant Mr Grade garnered little credit for what he achieved. The decision now to sell fitness, the fastest growing division, is odd — if the group retains the will to survive and thrive.

First Leisure shares, up 414p to 25414p, have recovered from October's low of 16014p. but are still short of the 436 p reached a year ago. Shareholders should hang on for the dénouèment: yesterday's deal clearly purs First if it is not broken up.

No surprise in better than expected performance

forecasters are confounded on a regular basis

f the world economy conlounds conventional forecasts this year — and it usually does — the main surprises are likely to be on the side of better than expected performance. This is the clearest conclusion t drew from conversations with the many eco-nomic officials gathered in Washington this week for the meetings of the G7, the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund.

In making this prediction, I realise that last week's official forecasts show global economic growth slowing to a feeble 2.3 per cent this year and then accelerating only modestly to 3.4 per cent in 2000.

t also recognise that Michael Mussa, the IMFs chief economist, has publicly stated that the risks to the forecast are still mostly on the downside. Mr Mussa believes that the US economy could slow more sharply than expected after its fourth-consecutive year of rapid growth. In Europe, where the IMF predicts that growth will accelerate from 2 to 3 per cent, Mr Mussa admits disarmingly that the basis for our forecast of stronger activity is not entirely clear". In Japan there is the very real possibility of an even deeper depression and in Asia and other emerging markets the hopes of recovery are still clouded by many doubts.

Why, then, do I feel fairly confident that the world economy will beat official forecasts? One reason is simply mechanical. When economic trends turn around, computerised models almost always underestimate the strength of both recoveries and slumps. This is not just a statistical quirk; it reflects an important feature of the real-life behavlour of policyma as businessmen and consumers, which conventional forecasts tend to ignore. This behaviour can be summarised in the classic sequence of financial emotions that characterise the tops and bottoms of bull and bear markets - "scepticism, denial, capitulation". As share prices rise towards the top of a bull market, investors are at first sceptical about the level of stock prices. As prices keep rising, the previously sceptical investors go into denial — simply refusing to believe that further gains are possible. Finally, when denial becomes impossible, the sceptics capitulate, throw caution to the winds and start buying the shares they considered overpriced when they were much cheaper several months or years before. It is usually soon after this point that a change in the trend finally occurs and the buil market col-

Alan Greenspan, Chairman of the Federal Reserve, which remains optimistic on US growth

Exactly the same sequence tends to occur, albeit in less visible form, among central bankers and businessmen at the top and bottom of an economic cycle. The most important examples at present can be seen in the behaviour of the Federal Reserve Board and the Europe-

Let us start with the ECB. Throughout last year the ECB and its predecessor, the Bundesbank, simply refused to take seriously the possibility of an economic downturn in Europe. When recession turned from possibility into reality last autumn, the ECB and the Bundesbank weot into outright denial. First the Bundesbank issued ludicrous comments suggesting that the global economic crisis would have less impact on Germany than on the US when all the staostics on trade and financial exposure pointed to the opposite conclusion. Then the ECB went even further, declaring that EMU would make Europe an "oasis of stability" in the very same week that Alan Greenspan, Chairman of US Federal Reserve, pointed out that not even the less-exposed American economy could hope to remain "an oasis of prosperity" in such a turbulent world.

Earlier this month, however, the ECB seemed finally to make the transition from denial to capitulation. With its unexpected 0.5 per cent rate cut and the subsequent state-ments by Wim Duisenberg. President of the ECB, implyening of the euro, the ECB ef-fectively threw in the towel on its deflationary doctrines.

Duisenberg and his colleagues continue to pay lip service to the dogma that monetary policy has nothing to do with unemployment, but actions speak louder than words. Nobody I talked to in Washington last week was in doubt about the ECB's new commitment to stimulating the European economy. The general view among the people who are familiar with the European central bankers could be summarised like this: when ECB officials say that they won't use monetary policy to manage the economic cycle. they may sound like fools; but

sume, therefore, that the ECB will keep easing monetary policy and the euro will keep falling (albeit with occasional corrections) until such time as the key European economies, including Germany, the structur-ally weakest one, show clear signs of growth.

But because there are bound to be long lags between interest rate cuts and visible signs of recovery, the ECB is likely to keep cutting interest rates even after a modest economic recovery is already "baked in the cake". This suggests that ECB policy will be eased far enough to ensure a stronger than expected recovery in euroland as a whole, if not perhaps in Germany. In America, an opposite, but equally powerful, sequence of scepticism, denial and capitulaoon can be observed. The Fedwas until last year extremely sceptical about Wall Street's belief that America was enjoying a "new paradigm" of rapid eco-nomic growth and low unem-ployment that carried no risk of inflation.

Last summer, as the statistical evidence in favour of a new paradigm mounted, the Russian crisis gave the Fed a convenient reason to deny the importance of the whole quesexcessive economic growth might lead to inflation, the Fed quite rightly switched its attention to the risk that financial turmoit would cause a slump. But today, the Fed is being forced to shift its focus back to inflation and rapid growth. In doing so, the Fed seems to be capitulating in its struggle against the "new paradigm". Officials now seems to accept that the US economy really can grow strongly for years on end without risking inflation.

The greatest surprise in my trip to America has been to hear senior Red officials speak-ing about the possibility that America's long-term trend growth rate may now be as high as 3 per cent, instead of the 2 to 25 per cent generally assumed even a year ago. Some also note that the present, apparently very low level of unemployment is actually very near the average in the 1950s and 1960s which was 4.6 per cent. If that level could be sustained in the postwar period without any serious inflationary problems, why should it not prove equally sustainable today?

o put this question an-other way, maybe there is no need for a new paradigm to ex-plain America's excellent economic performance. Perhaps it is sufficient to posit the old paradigm of the 1950s and early 1960s: a pragmatic mix of free market industrial policies, competitive labour markets and sensible demand manage ment operating in a flexible. entrepreneurial economy.

f have believed for several years that deregulated mar-kets combined with a return to the Keynesian "old paradigm" of active demand management could explain much of the recent economic success in America (and also in Britain). To my surprise and delight, I found senior Ped officials talking in very similar terms.

It remains to be seen whether events justify the Fed's optimism (and mine) about America's capacity for rapid, non-inflationary growth. It may turn out that the Fed has already waited too long before raising technology stocks on Wall Street, the consumer spending spree and the upsurge in US business investment could soon turn into an unsustainable, and ultimately inflationary, boom. In fact, if I were an American central banker I would start edging interest rates gently upwards now to restrain the enthusiasm a little. But the Fed seems less inclined than in the past to follow its traditional principle of "taking away the punchbowl just when the party is getting merry.

Maybe the Fed is wrong to give the economy so much leeway; more probably it is right. But either way, there is one prediction that can be made with a fair degree of confidence: in America, even more than in Europe, the economic surprises this year are likely to be on the upside.

Moves to a merger may solve the Co-op conundrum hat is the difference between a Co-opera-tive and a Co-op? If you don't know, don't worry this is one of the main problems that the fragmented and largely anonymous co-operative movement has to deal with.

This is the issue which yesterday's quasi-merger between the Co-operative Wholesale Society (CWS) and Cooperative Retail Society (CRS) is aimed at clearing up.
The result is that the CRS, which trades as the "Co-operative", has pooled its buying pow-er with the CWS, which sells goods labelled "Co-op". In reforming an age-old alliance, they hope to recapture their buying power — and defend themselves from the best their capitalist counterparts have to throw at them. Until fairly recently, the co-operative movement was quite straightforward. Almost all grocery shops traded under the distinctive "Co-op" logo, and is-sued stamps to shoppers who regularly queued for their

They set up the CWS, in 1863, to buy all the food. The idea was simple: buy in bulk; buy cheap to drive down prices; and let everyone share the profits.

As capitalists such as J Sainsbury expanded, the number of co-operative societies dwindled from a peak of 1,400 to 48 each independent but sharing profit" identity.

There are now two main camps. The first is dominated by the CWS, under Graham Melmoth - who two years ago saw off a hostile takeover approach from Andrew Regan, the 31-year-old financier.

CRS, which has 469 stores, has led the second faction and has been keen to steer clear of Mr Melmoth and his alliances. Until seven months ago, it bought its food from its own "refusenik" alliance: the Consortium of Independent Co-opera-tives (CIC)— which it formed with United Norwest and the Yorkshire Co-op. Both companies badly need to reduce costs to improve their financial performance. In May last year the CRS reported that losses had doubled to £26 million from £13.5 million, partly because of a £155 million invest-

The CWS is in the black, but its interim profits slid to £16 milon, from £20 million for the first six months of 1998. Mr Melmoth blamed this on the E7 million spent bringing back its

Much of the opposition to the CWS has been traced back to the era of Harry Moore, who resigned as CRS chief executive in October last year.

When the CIC alliance fell apart in September, Mr Moore said that the CRS would rather go it alone than join Mr Mel-moth and the CWS.

When Mr Moore retired, he was replaced by Andy Meeham, a former Storehouse manager, drafted in to inject some capitalist-management styles into the CRS.

One of his first moves was to commission Mckinsey, the management cosultant, to come up with proposals for a shakeup. The results came yesterday. Mr Meeham has sold off its non-grocery businesses, comprising 46 department stores called "Living" and 10 Home-world stores, This raised £149

Next, Mr Meeham has ended years of resistance and decided to join Mr Melmoth's alliance and has created a buving ma chine with firepower of £4.5 btl-

The idea is exactly the same as the original mono of the CWS: buy in bulk: and buy cheap. If effect, it generates all the price advantages of a full merger — which many industry observers think will be the next

By ending years of rivalry with the CWS and returning to his society's co-operative roots, Mr Mechan is also determined that the CRS should also be kept from the jaws of the monster.

SCANNING the speakers at tomorrow's Institute of Directors annual convencion, I detect a polidcian-free zone. The headlines at last year's event were stolen by Peter Mandel-son, who cunningly managed to be invited along even before he became Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

The members requested after last year's convencion not to have a policial speech," the loD tells me. Instead they get Michael Grade, Britain's former "pornographer-in-chief", and Sir Paul Condon of the Met Police, among others. So ends an odd rapprochement, even for the Blair era. Two years ago Tim Melville-Ross, Director-General at the loD, was tempted into some unwise remarks about how awful a Labour government would be, a prospect that materialised soon afterwards. Mandy's visit was seen as ce-menting new Labour's rela-tionship with all in the business world. But it seems they didn't want him back.

"With 21/2 million members you're telling me you're not one of them"

FURTHER on the Prince of Darkness (rtd). Mandelson's recent trip to South Africa to help the ANC's election cause was sponsored by the AEEU. The union has just settled the bill, and I understand that Ken Jackson, general secre-tary, had insisted that Mandy went economy class.

The reason? Payback time for Mandelson's well-publicised remarks to the Labour conference last year about "horny handed sons of toil".

Mother lode

A SHARP EYED Australian financial journalist set off a chain of events that led to the first successful legal action ever against a Swiss bank for the return of Holocaust vic-tims' assets. The story is told by James Kirby in My Moth-er's Diamonds, about the struggle to make the Swiss admit to such accounts.

The Irish-born Kirby was banking correspondent of The Australian when he came across a small ad in 1995 placed by a suburban Australian lawyer seeking claimants to recover assets lost to Swiss banks. Australia has, propor-donately, the world's largest community of Holocaust survi-vors outside Israel and stories he wrote for the paper brought hundreds of responses.

The book details the first settlement, by Swiss Bank Corporation with one of Henry Burstyner's clients. Publication was nearly prevented by a non-disclosure agreement signed by the lawyer, but enough of the story had come out beforehand.

Other litigants were successfully silenced, however. "The banks got better at this sort of thing soon after," says Kirby.

DANGEROUS things, emails. Steve Berry, assistant vice-president at Greenwich NatWest, fired off an electronic whinge to Liffe, the futures market, about having to work over the May and August Bank Holidays because European exchanges are open.

Copies of his message are, inexplicably, doing the rounds of the ether with various rude comments attached. "So now we are marching to the tune of the German Exchange." Berry rants. "Am I suddenly a European instead of British? Must put my watch forward another hour?"

Berry is refusing to comment on what he says is personal cor-respondence, but a colleague says: "He's terribly upset about it all."

LAST week Howard Stringer, chairman of Sony's American business, was barely known outside the TV world. He was then "outed" as one of the po-tential candidates to run the BBC. (He won't get it: the BBC governors are far too timid to appoint an American). I have just been invited to

Not at all. He doesn't know the cameras will be there. Someone at Oundle spotted that their old boy was newsworthy, according to the school's communications officer, Megan Smedley, who also teaches English. O brave new world, where schools have

■ The 1999 British Franchise Association Survey, sponsored by NatWest Bank, has just been published. According to the report, franchising turnover has risen by 6 per cent, to £7.4 billion, and the total franchise-related market is worth £57.9 billion. The report also looks at what is involved in applying for a franchise and the costs involved. The BFA Survey costs £87.50 and can be ordered via the BFA website at www.british-franchise.org.uk or by calling 01491 578049.

AFTER eight years of running his own recording studio. John Lambert felt it was time for a change. "My studio was little more than a hobby," says the man involved in producing the work of musicians such as

George Michael to explain his switch into Web design. "Music recording is a paral-lel process to website manage-ment," Mr Lambert adds. "It's highly technical, but fundamentally a creative operation."

Mr Lambert set up Hyperlink in 1993 as companies such as Demon were entering the new Internet market. Noticing the growth of firms keen to use the Internet as a marketing tool and the success of companies such as Demon cashing in on the phenomenon, he sold his studio and went into partnership with his wife, Isabel

Lydia McCormick-Weeks, direc tor of Hang-Ups Accessories, a maker of curtain fittings, says decisions on loans to small firms are often made by bank staff lacking insight. Hang Ups, run with her husband, employs eight and has £300,000 turnover a year. "My husband and I recently sought a mortgage. Although taxed as employees, as principal shareholders we are treated as self-employed and asked for a mountain of information and three years' company accounts. "Our prudent management appeared to work against us. Expanding the business from profits does little for your credit rating and makes for an unexciting bottom line, but a healthy balance sheet means nothing to your high street manager.

This is typical of banks who show a lack of understanding of the problems in starting a business. You have to fight the safe 'tick box' criteria organisations use in making decisions."

Indie goes to school

strange mixture of obsessive fan convention and teddy bear's picnic, the inaugural Bowlie Weekender festival went off without any serious hitches in the sleepy East Sussex holiday resort of Camber Sands last weekend. Organised by the Glasgow-based cult band Belle and Schastian, winners of the 1999 Brit award for Best Newcomer, this threeday event was intended to showcase the finest independent music past and present. with a bill hand-picked by the hosts themselves.

Based at Pontin's holiday camp, the sold-out festival had an oddly nostalgic ambience. Kitted out like Enid Blyton characters in duffel coats. school satchels and hairgrips, the 2,600 ocketholders seemed keen to recreate some sort of idealised pre-pubescent play-ground. The casual drug use which attends more orthodox rock festivals was barely evident, although there was doubtless a healthy black market in Smarties and Ribena. Apologists for Belle and Se-bastian and their diehard "indie" philosophy insist that Bowlie is the future of festivals, the antidote to impersonal events like Glastonbury with their appalling amenities and mainstream musical agenda. More cynical voices might argue that this is the last gasp of a creatively and ideologically bankrupt subculture, limping off to its seaside retirement home with only its rose-tinted memories for company. Either way, Bowlie undoubtedly generated a friendly atmosphere, and boasted cosy chalet accommodation far superior to most rock festivals. Serious scholars of rock history might well protest at the conservative musical menu.

you can't blame Scotty Moore and D.J. Fontana for coming out of retire-

which was almost exclusively white and guitar-based. Judged on its own terms, though, the weekend proved highly enjoyable.

A sizeable chunk of the bill added up to a comprehensive anthology of independent Scottish bands from the past 15 years. Veteran indie himinaries such as the Pastels and Teenage Fanclub, each plying their own distinctive brands of classic guitar rock, rubbed shoulders with their more wilfully atonal Clydeside off-spring AC Acoustics and the Delgados. All were enthusiastically received, but a bigger stir was caused by surprise guests Mogwai, whose volcanic rock instrumentals have garnered international acclaim in the past 18 months. In fact, Mogwai were excep-tional for being probably the only British act at Bowlie who could match the festival's foreign contingent for hardcore intensity. Explosive New York trio the Jon Spencer Blues Explosion brought a much-needed dash of sexually charged. primal punk attitude to proceedings. Similarly, the Montreal collective Godspeed You Black Emperor conjured up remarkably fierce, darkly atmospheric instrumentals by employing violins and cellos with violent irreverence.

The all-female American trio Sleater-Kinney brought a flinty, fractious brand of fastpaced guitar pop to Bowlie. Not to be outdone, the versatile Japanese multi-instrumenever saw him.

talist Cornelius abandoned the electronic soundscape of his records to deliver a punishingly loud garage-rock set.

But the biggest non-British attractions of the weekend were undoubtedly two veteran American underground bands, Mercury Rev and the Flaming Lips. Universally lauded for their 1998 album Deserter's Songs, Mercury Rev played a magisterial set grounded in rootsy traditionalism but peppered with more experimental echoes of their arty past. At times it was like listening to a Seventies stadi-

dering guitar solos which threatened to stretch until Christmas, but their masterful marriage of quavering choirboy vocals to toweringly anthemic tunes left little room for any reaction besides awestruck reverence. The Flaming Lips, meanwhile, seem poised to repeat Mercury Rev's suc-cess with their imminent album A Soft Bulletin. Blending orchestra strings with guitars, key-pre-recorded boards and soaringly melancholic vocals, these grey-templed Oklahomans played a blazing set of soulful psychedeum supergroup, with mean- lia touched by occasional flash-

catalogue more or less chronologically for just over an hour, starting with That's All Right (Mama) and ending with 1958's King Creole, and there were many who were thrilled just to see two veterans of the Sun studio standing on stage. The fact that they could still play a bit was almost a bonus. Earlier in a radio interview, Moore had been unable even to remember the names of the pick-up band, and as they reprieved Mystery Train for the... second time you couldn't help feeling it was all a bit sad.

NIGEL WILLIAMSON

he American alterna-tive country scene is a booming cottage industry right now but Arizona's we Gelb and his band, Giant Sand, have been quietly re-leasing leftfield rootsy folk records since the 1980s. Their collaboration with kooky singer/songwriter Lisa Germano on the OP8 project resulted in one of the best albums of 1997 in Slush, and now Gelb has just released his first solo al-burn, Hisser, on the V2 label. Recorded mostly at his Tucson home using a 19th-century upright grand piano, a Salvation Army pump organ and a turn-of-the-century gut string acoustic guitar, Hisser is a sparse but beautiful record that seems spooked by its time travelled instruments and the ghosts of the balmy desert which surround it. Yet it translated extremely well to a Dublin stage on this, the fag end of Gelb's European tour.

Whelan's bar is the ideal location for such a gig, thanks in part to the warm, orange glow of its soft lighting, and the wel-coming tables and chairs in front of the stage that allow the clusters of people further back in this snug venue a clear view of proceedings: Tall, dark and strikingly handsome: Gelh looks like a character in a Bruce Springsteen road song, with his denim shirt, cowboy boots and gruff, goatee beard. All the stage is his playground, as he shuffles from electric piano to acoustic guitar to the array of fanciful gadgetry on show. Almost by way of an apology for the fact that he is the only musician at work, he runs pre-recorded tapes through a tiny mixer on stage which is in turn run through distortion, delay and tremolo pedals. By all accounts, he prepares no set list. Such wilful spontaneity and jaunty haphazardry kept him on his toes and us continually surprised and excited by his next trick. One minute, he is playing a live recording of two Pakistani sisters singing an Abba standard in Hindu, the next he is picking on his acous-tic guitar and singing a mournful, wasted-sounding bailed about "the flaws of rapture" that puts one in mind of On The Beach-era Neil Young.

Despite a starry cast and director,

Pushing Tin has not set America alight. Giles Whittell reports hen the director of Four Wed-dings and a Funeral makes a comedy thriller about air traf-fic controllers, you have to ask why. What made Mike Newell think the singularly specialised profession of aerial orienteering was his sort of materi-al? The short answer is that the New York Times Magazine ran a story on air traffic controllers in 1996 that caught his eye. The langer one must be that he thought he could heat up some compelling human drama in the pressure cooker of a windowless room filled with radar screens.

Well, he hasn't. Pushing Tin is a film that lures you in with the promise of slick New York laughs and slabs of jar-gon-laden dialogue (which is, to be sure, one of the great unacknowledged crowd-pullers; just ask Tom Stoppard), only to leave you follygagging in Long Island at two moderately interesting couples being unfaithful to each other.

Pushing Tin - the phrase refers to the business of moving planes around the sky - is also a gift to film critics fond of clumsy metaphors. It's "a lively flight for most of the way". said Variety, generously. Peo-ple magazine decided it "fails to stay aloft". The Chicago Sun Times likened it to "an overloaded airplane strugging to lift off", and the Los Angeles Times called it a "near miss".

To be fair, for its first halfhour it soars. Giant metal tubes with fuel-laden wings do their dangerous ballet over the world's most dramatic duster of skyscrapers as knowing voiceovers speak rapidly of knots, altitude and sharp left

thanks to Kennedy, Newark and La Guardia airports, apparently handles "more planes, closer together, than anywhere else on earth". West Drayton may disagree, but when we hear that each controller is "responsible for more lives in a single shift than a surgeon in his entire life", we dare not quibble. The sensation is not unlike watching ER: we are under the spell of competence, and this makes it unnerving that the controllers themselves are so close to being bonkers. Only one of them is female, and she's a bodybuilder, while the sanest of the men is insanely competitive.

eet Nick "the Zone" Falzone, played by John Cusack. He can line up half-a-dozen incoming jumbos while serenading his colleagues in a dulcet baritone, and still leave time for private banter with each pilot. Lines like "Welcome to my sky, my favourite redneck" are his idea of chumminess.

Falzone starts out happily married to Cate Blanchett who, as a Long Island house-he enjoys sports, for instance, he says he "used to bowl" when he was an alcoholic, and makes it sound as if he liked stealing babies too. Meanwhile, Jolie — who is Jon Voigt's daughter — looks con-vincingly lost in New York, and Cusaci effortlessly carries the affair along, insofar as it goes anywhere.

Here lies the problem. The dialogue is sharp and sounds authentic, as it should when written by Gien and Les Charles, two of the creators of Cheers. But once the Zone has slept with Mrs Bell there is, apart from the inevitable recriminations and an insultingly contrived bomb scare, no plot. It's as if Newell is scared of lingering on the nerdish niceties of air traffic control, which in fact are the most intriguing aspect of the film. Most people fly, after all, and most want to land in one piece. True, air traffic controllers are not astronauts, and there are limits to the intrinsic elamour of a crew of tense arithmeticians in a darkened bunker. This is why, as Pushing Tin unfolds, one often wishes one of the swaggering maestros of action were doing the unfolding. There's an aluminium shower in that guy's future," Falzone says of Bell, meaning cause a mid-air collision. So where's the collision? Or at least the fullblown near miss or, at the very least, a suicide or nervous breakdown, since we're told air traffic controllers have so many of these? If this were a Jerry (Top Gun) Bruckheimer film, we'd have all three, and a villain trying to mess with the radar to boot. Instead we end up with not one but two controllers cartwheeling in the downdraft of a 747 in search of themselves. Pushing Tin did not light-up

This mordant satire on contemporary American high school life boasts a career-making performance by Reece Witherspoon as a sickeningly ambitious know-all, and a career-saving turn by Mat-thew Broderick (hopeless in Godzilla last year) as her wellmeaning teacher. It was not in the weekend's Top Ten films - possibly because it leaves an unintentionally bleak impression in the wake of the Columbine school shootings. Then again, The Matrix is one of the films accused of inspiring the school gunmen, and in its fourth week it's back at No I.

wince to say it, but Yo Yo Ma has his ups and downs. He is both an aristocrat of the cello and its irre pressible enfant terrible. It is to his eternal credit that he has escaped the endless round of Elears and Dvoráks that make up the career of most world-class cellists, to explore other traditions: his yo-yola, latter enterprise has not always been a success. There is more to playing a gut-strung cello with a Baroque bow than getting the equipment right. VIVALDES GLORIA Reviewed by Lucie Skeeping or those taking in Venice on the Grand Tour in the early 18th century, there was one part of the innerary that simply could not be missed - a visit to the Ospedale della Pieta, one of the city's four institutions for orphaned, illegitimate or abandoned girls. Every Sunday and Feast Day its great doors would be thrown open to the public for concerts given by the inmates - and Vivaldi wrote this grandscale setting of part of the Catholic Mass for them. These days, the work is so popular it has almost become his "Fifth Season". Collegium Musicum 90 under Richard Hickox has bagged two of the best sopranos for this sort of thing - Emma Kirkby and Tessa Bonner, whose close-harmony cooing in the duet Laudamus to is quite delicious. The choruses are bright and appealing, although the string playing sometimes felt a little routine. I preferred The Sixteen's performance overall - lots of contrast, beautifully phrased and some thoughtful continuo accompaniments - and their alto soloist is wonderfully unplummy. I enjoyed Nikolaus Harnoncourt's Concentus Musicus Wien with the Arnold Schoenberg Choir too, particularly their energetic opening Gloria and the beauofully played reedy oboe solo in the Domine deus. If you like your Vivaldi big and buxom you could go for the New Philharmonia Chorus and Orchestra, under Riccardo Muo, with the fullbodied operatic voices of Teresa Berganza and Lucia Valentini-Terrani, although the balance at omes makes the chorus sound strangely far away. The Choir of King's moving and confident performance. Mind you, appealing though they are, there is a certain irony in using boys' voices in this work, one of the few examples of sacred Baroque music written specially for girls. With this in mind my favourite performance, then, is the one given by the Taverner Choir and Players, directed by Andrew Parrett (Virgin Classics VC 7 59326-2 CD, only available through EMI's Special Import Service £15.99). They daringly dis-pense with male voices altogether, simply singing the tenor and bass parts up the octave, as might well have been done in Vivaldi's ome. The effect is quite startling. Warm, sensidve and full of spirit, they really do sound like "a choir of angels" - very exciting and very Vivaldi.

▼ irne was when voices of discontent were raised whenever black actors were given leading roles in productions of Shakespeare (Othello excepted) or other Jacobean or Restoracon dramatists. Pedants (and 1 was one) pointed out that Macbeth's court was all white, and that if Prospero was white and Miranda black some questions should have been asked of Mrs Prospero. Oh, big joke. The pedants were ignored. Black actors played ever more demanding roles, and in the larger outfits, the Royal Shakespeare Company and the National, they remained with the company for months or years at a time. The importance of this is now obvious. While valuable work is done by all-black companies, actors who spend their working lives in them forfeit the experience of working on the classics with resident teachers and thus miss the chance of observing the styles, the tricks, the disciplines and all the rest of the procedures that go by the name of "theatrical tradition".

It is because the RSC has been at the forefront of what is awkwardly called colour-blind casting that from tomorrow it is able to stage a new version of Aphra Behn's novel Oroonoko in Stratford. Published in 1688, the year before Behn's death at the age of about 48 (most events in her early life are far from certain), the book tells of a West African prince sold into slavery and transported to Surinam, at that time ruled by the Eng-lish. Here his noble character impresses all who encounter him, including Behn herself, who follows the custom of novelists of the time in claiming that hers is an eyewitness account. After sundry adventures he leads a slave revolt, is captured by trickery and killed.

The book is an asionishing work for its period, holding up both the native Americans and the African slaves to admiration, exposing Christian hypocrisy and providing the earliest popular account of the slave previous life in a part of Africa that Behn calls Coromanden. So when the RSC director Greg Doran pointed out that the company now had a body of black actors with the ability to present a more authentic producoon, the decision was also made to restore these unused passages from the original text. The writer com-missioned to make the new adaptation was the Nigerian-born play-wright and novelist, Biyi Bandele.

At no point is she patronising about Oroonoko. But it took me a long time to find the stage language for it. Southerne managed to turn it into something like a Restoration comedy. David Garrick went to the other extreme and became very earnest. Then one morning I woke up and knew I had to do it in poetry.

His solution was bound up with the decision to resite the African half of the play in Yorubaland (Bandele is a Yoruba). "I think Aphra Behn's Coromantien, which is in modern Ghana, is purely notional are recognisably Yoruba. I have invented almost everything that is said, though I have been faithful to the plot of her story. But I wrote it in poetry because I imagined the conversations happening in Yoru-ba, a highly rhetorical language. I felt that the best way to capture the poetry when translating it into English was to keep it as poetry.

"Nobody knows how Aphra Behn got hold of the story, but even if it had an historical reality it's more interesting to look at it as mythology. Because then it becomes clearer. Myths are more interesting than history because where history is prose, myth is poetry, and poetry someomes illuminates with very simple images. You have a kind of distillation of reality."

And so at the Other Place this week all the characters, black and white, prince, slave and plantation owner, will speak a heightened form of English. Behn herself wrote poetry. Biyi Bandele and the RSC are allowing her humane, poetic voice a hearing in the theatre once

t took the American play-wright Don Hood 12 years to research his new play about the relationship between Rudolf Hess and his guard through his last two decades in Spandau Prison. They were years well spent.

Receiving its world premiere at the New End Theatre. this is a sparely written, tautly constructed and quietly devastating piece. Hess was the deputy Führer of Germany until 1941, when he inadvertently bailed out of the war after his secret mission to broker a peace deal with Briosh appeasers was disowned by Hitler. He was subsequently sentenced to life imprisonment at Nuremberg. For two decades The Cuckeo and the Nightingale Hampstead

On the back of these muchexhumed bones, Hood fleshes out a complex and disquieting portrait of a deluded but compelling man. With almost no contact with the outside world, Hood's defiantly unrepentant Hess dreams of escaping to lead a Fourth Reich. He goosesteps. He salutes. He address-es his beloved Hitler.

Supporting this portrait is Hess's American guard Captain David Morgan, himself destined to remain at Spandau until Hess dies. Much of the play dramatises their first encounters in 1966. Prisoner and guard circle each other; Hess invariably prevails. Later, the years breed an uneasy equality. Nigel D. Hoyle is very good as Morgan, but Leonard Presion gives a quite electrifying performance as Hess. Its only faults are a snarling, spitting caricature of Hitler and the physical limitations of this tiny space. Otherwise, this is acted, staged and scripted with uncommon intelligence.

This is Holi's act of humage to his beloved Lorca, in the poet's centenary year. Fash-ioned from The Love of Don Perlimplin for Belisa in the Garden, it is a true favola in musica, a fable of the elderly husband who has to learn about the delights of the body, while his new and voluptuous young wife must find the soul.

Just as Lorca's aphoristic play lives by parody — of character, of honour, of love — so Holt's score seems to he parodying almost every convention of Modernist musical language, even opera itself. And the extreme leaps and wild melismas of the vocal writing.

Spanish lessons in life

Domingo in Zarzuela Barbican

D lacido Domingo set oul on Sunday to prove, with a handful of Spanish colleagues and the Covent Garden orchestra, that zarzuela is not just a secret of Iberia. His parents both specialised in this form of operetta, so in part it was an act of remembrance of the songs they taught him. Only once did he have recourse to a score.

Zarzuela is often crudely referred to as Spain's answer to Gilhert and Sullivan. Domingo soon put the lie to that. The arias and duets chosen were mainly meaty slices of spurned or unrequiled love, with the influence of Cilea and Mascagni audible just across the Mediterranean. Only one item, by Suotullo and Carbonell, suggested the kind of music Lehar was composing in Vienna in the 1920s, when the zarzuela was at its height. Everything came easily to Domingo, some might argue 100 easily. He was in burnished voice, with the bariton-HILARY FINCH all qualities which have been full display. Here was Cavaradossi rekindled, not Nanki-Poo, as he prowled the Barbican stage. All of which, Domingo made clear, showed that some of us in Central London knew roughly as much about zarzuela as they do of G & S in Plazatoro.

there since the earliest days on

He had an outstanding partner in Ainhoa Arteta, a soprano who has been making a considerable name for herself in America. She has the haughty stance of a flamenco dancer and is not averse to a swing of the hips. The voice has a shimmering top to it and plenty of weight in the middle a natural Museua, a role she is shortly to sing at the Met. She started impressively with an aria by Guridi, and never looked back. Covent Garden, it is to be hoped, had its contracts at the stage door.

The mezzo, Cecilia Diaz, also making a company debut. took longer to warm up. She improved hugely as the evening moved on, using the smoky iones of the best Spanish mezzos in a soulful number by Chapi declaring elernal love. Miguel Roa was the dapper, energetic conductor. The ROH orchestra was on its mettle in generally unfamiliar music and Rosa egged them on their way, notably in three flashy overtures which showed that the zarzuela composers knew how to get their audience excited before the curtain went up. A generous helping of encores rounded off an

revolution place in the civil jus-tice system this week. Out goes our traditional costly drawn-out system of litigation with lawyers indulging in trial by com-bat — a system epitomised in Bleak House's Jarndyce v Jarndyce. In comes a speedy, costsensitive system in which judges - not lawyers - set the pace of linigation and people are encouraged with financial ncentives to settle before trial. Lord Woolf, Master of the folls and architect of the refrms, accepts that it may nean a rougber, readier justie, but for many more peo-p. "Quite extraordinary that we have run this system for so long without question." As well as uncertainty, there can be disproportionate cost. Roger Parker. Richards Butler's head of litigation, cites a case which came to court four years after proceedings were issued. A sum of £3 million was at stake. After a 12-week trial, the case was settled, with costs of £2 million each. Mr Parker says: "Woolf will help to create a climate where you don't go into those cases unless you've tried to explore whether there's a way out." Andrew Hearne, head of liogation at Timuss Sainer Dechert, adds that people will not be allowed to run up huge costs over

From this week, judges become trial managers, setting ómetables for cases and imposing cost penalties for delay. They can summarily dismiss weak claims and order the parties to try mediation. Woe be-tide a lawyer, Mr Hearne says, who sits back and waits for his next deadline. He or she will face hefty costs.

Lawyers are understandably nervous about what is a complete culture change. Some claim that the preparation time has been inadequate; that the changes will just shift the costs of litigation to its early stages; or that injustices will occur from excessively proactive and speedy judges. But most think that the reforms will benefit the customer, Barry Warne, of Irwin Mitchell, the Sheffield law firm, cites a case of a building sought to repossess woman's home. It took the woman. Hazel Archer, ten to defeat them and what as £20,000 claim against her ended with a legal bill for the society and her taken with the loss of the original loan, of £500,000. "Under Woolf," he says, "this case would have been settled or mediated, with huge time and cost savings."

Crucial to the reforms' success are the judges. Are they ready for their new role? They have undergone special training. But one deputy High Court judge recently told a litigator that the reforms "do not really change very much". The hope is that his view is a minority one. Lord Woolf points out that in the commercial court. judges are already leading the way, managing cases and encouraging parties to use other methods to settle disputes. There is also concern about over-eager judges. Lawyers expect them to come down hard from the start, but Lord Woolf says they will be flexible. Their new wide powers will make them liable to scrutiny and challenge. But Lord Woolf argues that all rulings will be subject to appeal. The Access to Justice Bill will also devolve many appeals on procedural points to lower courts, speeding up the appeals process: there will be a special Court of

Appeal fast track for procedural points; and the court will issue regular guidance.

Not all the reforms will be in place from day one. The computer back-up for judges, enabling them to manage cases on their laptops and with direct links with the court system. will not be there until next year at best. As a result, Lord Woolf says, the economies will not be made, and extra administrative staff have to be provided. But he is content, if not happy, that the technology should not be rushed. Secondly, the cap on legal fees chargeable in the fast track (which hears disputes of up to £15,000) will apply only to the trial itself, where a cap of £750 has been set for the three-hour hearings. The Lord Chancellor. Lord Irvine of Lairg, is to consult on whether pre-trial costs should also be capped. The limited cap will bring more certainty, but it is. Lord Woolf says, "half a cake rather than the whole".

The reforms are meant to make litigation easier. "The philosophy I have adopted." Lord Woolf argues, "is that if the law gives a person a right, it is only proper that the law should be able to enforce that right." But paradoxically, the upshot should be fewer trials. With hefty penalties for those who stall or unreasonably refuse to settle, people will have to settle earlier.

"We will see many disputes sorted out without the courts being bothered," he says. "It is a huge change. It really is the end of the majestic, expensive, disproportionate unequal system we have been living with for too long."

How my small claim left me with a big bill

For minor disputes to be solved without lawyers, the procedure must be made simpler rom this week it should be easier and cheaper for people to use the courts.

But the Woolf reforms are also aimed at encouraging people to sort out sim-ple disputes without using lawyers at all. The idea is that more people should use the small claims court, which will now be able to hear claims of up to £5,000. Litigants will have to represent themselves because legal aid is not normally available for such cases.

In January 1996 the limit on small claims disputes was raised from £1,000 to £3,000. It is a measure of the Government's confidence in this route to justice that the limit is being raised by a further £2.000. Doubts, however, have been raised over the scheme's effectiveness. Government research has found that while some litigants benefit, others struggle with the complexity of the law and arrive at court poorly prepared. Many have had difficulty in enforcing judgments once obtained. My own recent experience with the small claims court suggests that the courts, judges and solicitors have yet to embrace the culture change needed to DAN BINDMAN make the process user-friendly.

In my case, I decided to bring a small claim as a litigant-in-person without a legal qualifica-

My claim was for £1,200 worth of damage caused to my car by a negligent driver, who, for-tunately, bad insurance. The insurance company's claims handlers did not contest liability, but they made me an offer that I considered too low. I went to my local county court, which accepted my claim against the insurance company without comment, along with a fee of £80, I looked forward to putting my case at an informal hearing before a district judge. That was my first mistake. It turned out that I should not have sued the insurance company. but the driver. This is a mere technicality, because in any case the insurer has to be sent a copy of the summons, and its solicitors take responsibility for dealing with it.

Instead of simply pointing this out to me, the solicitors served a "defence" to my claim, accusing me of being "frivolous" and of "abuse of process". They also applied to the court for the cost of drafting the defence. I needed legal advice. Acting on it, I discontinued the case and issued fresh proceedings, this time against the

Surely, I thought, at the forthcoming costs hearing the judge would accept my argument that the solicitors' defence, though powerful. was pointless since I could never have succeeded in suing their client. Instead, I would argue, the solicitors should have written to tell me that I was pursuing a hopeless case. After all, having seen the details of my claim, they could have been in no doubt of what I was trying to do and, as solicitors for the insurers, they had to deal with the claim anyway. Confident that the judge would right this wrong. I rejected an offer from the solicitors to settle the costs bill for £85 and gave notice that I would defend the application in person.

That was my second mistake. By the time of the costs hearing, the solicitors' bill had inflated to £465. At the hearing, the judge had little sympathy for a misguided layperson. "Of course," the judge concluded, "the solicitors had a right to issue a defence on behalf of their client." When I protested, he said: "Litigants name the wrong defendant at their peril." Though my spirits were lifted when the judge described the solicitors' claim for 90 minutes of barrister's time as "absurd", by the end of the hearing I found myself owing the insurance company £180.88 and the merits of my claim for damages had not even been heard. Still reeling from this unhappy experience, I suggest three reforms consistent with the new legal climate that the Woolf reforms seek to engender, First, claims issued by litigants-in-person should be assessed for technical accuracy when they are deposited with court officials. Secondly, solicitors should be obliged to consider the interests of a litigant-in-person before seeking shelter behind technicalities and clocking up fee-earner time. Thirdly, judges should show greater imagination in protecting the interests of litigants-in-person. As Lord Woolf said: "The court has got to take on responsibility, clearly as part of its duties, to lend help to the litigant who needs it."

Assistant Legal Counsel, Europe Northamptonshire, European HQ 'Delivering the Promise'

Part of Cendant, the world's premier provider of consumer and business services, including such brands as PHH, Green Flag and NCP, RCI is the world's largest provider of vacation exchange opportunities. Founded in 1974, Resort Condominiums International pioneered the concept of vacation exchange and is now a truly global operation which handles the holiday and travel arrangements for over 6.5 million people world-wide each year.

In view of an expanding workload, an excellent opportunity has arisen for a dynamic lawyer to join the European legal team providing legal advice and support on all aspects of corporate/commercial legal work for RCI's operations across the Europe, Middle East, Africa and India business region. This will involve a wide range of work including drafting and negotiating a broad range of commercial contracts, advising on regulatory issues arising from RCI's travel business, monitoring use of RCI's trade marks and other intellectual property, assisting with company secretarial/compliance matters and advising on and assisting with any employment and property law issues, as required.

This role will suit a UK qualified solicitor or barrister with between 2 and 4 years post qualification experience, gained either in house or in private practice. Solid general commercial experience is key, particularly commercial contracts, joint ventures, intellectual property and IT. Experience of travel law would be advantageous, though not a prerequisite. The successful candidate roust have a flexible approach and the ability to deal with an unpredictable workload and whilst technical expertise is essential, a seose of humour and commercial flair are also vital qualities. Language skills would be a bonus, given the pan-European nature of this role.

Havs Richard Owen

Insurance Litigator

Bromley, Kent

c. £40k + car & benefits

Churchill is a market leader in the provision of motor and household insurance products within the UK and has reached this position in just over ten years of trading. Due to a change in approach to the handling of litigation, Churchill now intends to appoint its first inhouse solicitor.

Candidates for this exciting, strategic post should have a minimum of 3 years post qualification experience specialising in insurance litigation, together with a detailed technical knowledge of motor insurance and the Road Traffic Act.

Working closely with senior management, the responsibilities of this role will include managing a portfolio of third party claims, developing and advising the Claims teams and working with a panel of external solicitors. An integral part of this role is the ability to think creatively and demonstrate a proactive, commercial approach to claims handling.

Applications are invited from lawyers with experience gained in private practice or in-house, with strong interpersonal skills and the desire to operate with a high degree of autonomy. The successful candidate will be an energetic team leader with the presence and confidence to influence at all levels.

This is a key management position and, as such, comes with a competitive salary and the benefits of a leading financial company.

For further details, in complete confidence, please contact either Helen McAtamney or Struan Hall our retained consultants at Graham Gill & Young, 46 Kingsway, London WC2B 6EN. Tel: 0171 430 1711. Fax: 0171 831 4186. E-mail: ggy@netcomuk.co.uk This assignment is being handled exclusively by GG&Y. All direct or third party applications will be forwarded to them.

eter Duffy, QC, who died of cancer last month at the age of 44, never sought rec-ognition for himself; he was more concerned about winning it for others. So it is not surprising that, in the recent batch of awards for human rights work, it was he who had nominated the winners. The full recognition he so much deserved was finally forthcoming when - on the strength of a host of nominations - he was named last week as The Times/Jusoce Lawyer of the Year.

Anne Owers, the director of Justice, who presented the award to Duffy's wife Vivienne, and daughters Clare, Helen and Sarah at a reception at 11 Downing Street, said his death was a huge loss to the UK legal community. Most of his cases were milestones in human rights: Gypsies, asylum-seekers, gay rights, Diane Blood and the Pinochet appeal in which he appeared for Amnesty International. He died

The judging panel — which in-cluded Lord Woolf, the Master of the Rolls; Robert Ayling, the chair-man of British Airways; the MP Chris Mullin; and Ms Owers also decided that a special award should go to another lawyer, Rosemary Nelson, who was murdered in Belfast in March.

in nominating her, the Belfastbased Committee on the Administration of Justice stated that she represented the "very best of the legal profession, defending her clients, regardless of their alleged crimes and to the very best of her ability". That commitment had led directly to her murder, the nomination said. "It would have been safer to stick to non-controversial cases and to pick and choose who came to her for help," it added, "but that was not Nelson's concept of justice."

United Nations principle states that lawyers should not be identified with their clients or their clients' causes as a result of discharging their functions. The com-mittee said: "Rosemary Nelson paid the highest possible price when this principle was disregarded; lawyers must honour her memo-

estern lawyers do not come high on the list Nato war in Yugoslavia — bui in a business sense they are in there somewhere. The law firm with the most to lose is probably the City solicitors Denton Hall. Mark Harrison, a former Ever-sheds lawyer, has been in Belgrade working for the Serbian and Macedonian Governments on privatisation and regulation. Will Hulbert, a spokesman for the firm, said this week that such work had been "put on hold": Mr Harrison has left Belgrade.

Interviewed in Sofia last week, he was understandably cagey about the work he has been doing for the Serbs. Mr Hul-bert said that the The war is firm was "playing its cards close to its chest", although Elizabeth Rantzen, its business development manager, admitted that Mr Harrison and Blanche Sas

Denton Hall is not alone in its interest in the Balkans. In 1996, when Eversheds still employed Mr Harrison, the firm joined a trade delegation to Serbia to look for investment opportunities. Mr Harrison said at the time that he expected Eversheds to play a big part in the reconstruction process and spoke enthusiastically about the potential of Montenegro's tourism industry. Now those views look like wishful thinking. Even so, Mr Harrison persisted with his ambitions for work in Yugoslavia. Eversheds management, however, did not share his vision and he joined Denton Hall.

Eversheds, though, has not entirely abandoned interest in the area. The firm has just appointed Francis Chubb, a former army officer who has worked with Nato's forces in Bosnia, to join the offices of Georgiev To-dorov & Co. the Sofia firm with which it has an exclusive relationship. According to Alan Jenkins. who masterminds the Eversheds international policy, this is a first step towards a possible office in the country. Mr Chubb and Mr Harrison may, with any luck, have the opportunity of enjoying Sofia's nightlife logether. So despite the war, business goes on. Michael Dark, who runs Taylor Joynson Garrett's Bucharest office, reports that one of his transactions has fallen through because of the problems on the Danube. "But aside from that, we have not been affected," he says. SPORTS LAWYERS

WE'LL STRETCH YOU FURTHER

If you're at the stage in your career when you need to reach even higher, read on...

Sport has become both headline news and big business. Every year, the stakes grow higher, the issues more complex and the perspective more International. Sports-related law continues to develop at a similar rate, and Denton Hall Is building a strong reputation based on the quality and diversity of our client list.

In fact, we are rightly regarded as leaders in our field, representing not only broadcasters, agencies, sponsors and individuals, but also governing bodies such as the FA Premier League, Commonwealth Games Federation, Rugby Football Union and the England & Wales Cricket Board. With topics ranging from Intellectual property, corporate, broadcasting and sponsorship to disciplinary matters, regulatory advice and personal injury, we are constantly in the media spotlight and always tackling the groundbreaking Issues.

That's why we need both a contentious and a non-contentious lawyer to strengthen our specialist team and support a growing volume of work. You will be operating alongside some of the most celebrated figures in sports law, and enjoy front-line contact with top clients. High profile cases, high level involvement, high quality support - it's a uniquely rewarding experience.

The caseload is challenging, and the environment intellectually demanding; the legal issues are novel and complex. The work will stretch you more than most comparable practices but we believe that the best lawyers also have a life beyond the office. It's a refreshingly different approach that allows you to achieve an elusive, but vital balance between professional work and personal commitments.

For either role, you will need a track record demonstrating outstanding academic achievement and 2-4 years' post-qualification experience in a first-rate City firm. You must be a natural team player, a skilled communicator and a strong client developer. Above all, you must possess a keen, agile intellect capable of handling the complex legal Issues raised by our groundbreaking work.

If you're eager to reach new heights, now is the time for action. Contact Jacqui Burgess or Paul Green in our Personnel Department on 0171 320 6016/6017, or write with your CV to Denton Hall. 5 Chancery Lane, Clifford's Inn, London EC4A 1BU.

RACING: SUNSPANGLED SHARES FAVOURITISM AFTER GODOLPHIN HOPE IS RULED OUT

Etizaaz joins classic absentees

By CHRIS McGrath

ting have been laboured to the point of cruelty in the Sagitta 1,000 Guineas, where a setback to Etizaaz is just the latest in a long sequence of misfortunes to thwart leading fancies for Sunday's classic. These have ranged from the tragedy that claimed Bint Allayl to the lesser hitches that have ruled out Bionic, Blue Cloud and now Etizaaz.

Ladhrokes have Sunspangled sharing 4-I favouritism with Moiava, the French filly who was herself forced to miss an intended trial after a training reverse. In common with Orpen in the Sagitta 2,000 Guineas, Sunspangled has developed ominous momentum in the market since they both impressed Aidan O'Brien. their trainer, on the Ballydoyle gallops last Friday.

The scratching of Etizaaz represents a dispiriting start to perhaps the most exciting week yet in the Godolphin adventure. Thankfully, the 30 horses who arrived in Newmarket from Dubai yesterday enjoyed a smooth flight, though they will be given a day to settle in before stretching their legs on the Heath. Only then will running plans be confirmed for the Guineas meeting. Sheikh Mohammed and his team will, naturally enough, be at Churchill Downs on Saturday, when Worldly Manner and Aljabr contest the Ken-tucky Derby. Do not be surprised, however, if he makes it back to Newmarket in time for the 1,000 Guineas.

Fairy Queen, Pescara and Calando retained the opportunity to stand in for Etizaaz, while in the previous days 2.000 Guineas, Godolphin's main hope. Island Sands, is joined by Easaar and Rhythm Band among 22 acceptors.

2.00 Migration

THE perils of ante-post bet shape of the draw. The runners seem likely to spread across the track and could easily break into two groups; there were certainly races at the Craven Meeting where the far rail conferred an advantage.

Those who do consider the 2000 Guineas rather anonymous this year, should note that Sir Mark Prescott hopes to run Triple Dash. This Nashwan colt looked the part in two starts over six furlongs last year. He will be well served by the extra distance but Prescott is discouraged by the weather forecast. "I've always felt he needs cut, and that if we were lucky this could be the year when we get a softground Guineas. But it doesn't sound like we are going to get rain." Prescott said

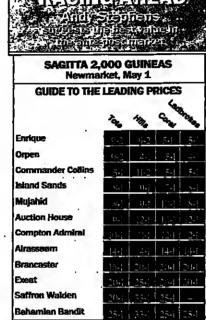

"He is entitled to be there as a longshot. His mother never stopped improving with age and I've always felt this will be a four-year-old, but I've intended that he should run from last autumn, if the ground were all right and if he pleased me and he has worked well enough to take his chance." As intimated by O'Brien on Friday, Stravinsky has been withdrawn. Another loose end was tied up yesterday when Jeremy Noseda turned to Gary Carter for Desaru. But Pat Eddery, who created that vacancy by switching to Compton Admiral will partner the same trainer's Wannabe Grand in the 1,000 Guineas. ☐ Kim Bailey has recently endured more than his fair share of tribulations in both his professional and domestic life but yesterday announced his intention, at 45, to make a fresh start. With great sadness the jumps trainer is selling Old Manor Stables and from Octoher will be based at Preston Capes in Northamptonshire. "I have enjoyed Lambourn and would like to thank all the staff and owners who have supported me," he said. "The last two years personally have taken a very large toll and I wish to start afresh."

THE sound of bubbles being burst this spring has been almost afening and, before the week is out, a few more will be popped because Commander Collins, Orpen, Island Sands and Auction House - all prominent in the anta-post betting - will make their seasonal reappearances in the Sagitta 2,000 Guineas at vmarket on Saturday

All four, perhaps with the exception of Commander Collins, have been the subject of glowing reports, but then so were Mujahid, Stravinsky and Killer Instinct - and look what happened to them on their respective comeback rurs. The advice is to ignore the hype and instead rely on receourse evidence. Compton Admiral is the most colling of the leading cardinates after his defeat of is the most solid of the leading candidates after his defeat of Brancaster in the Craven Stakes. The bare form looks short of classic standard, but at least he has proven himself over a mile – something that Enrique, Orpen and Auction House have yet to do. However, BAHAMIAN BANDIT, a 33-1 chance with Hills, is the one to be interested in. His trainer, Richard Hannon, who knows what it takes to win this race having won it three times before with Mon Fils (1973), Don't Forget Me (1987) and Tirol (1990), never hurries his youngsters so it was highly encouraging that he should be capable of trouncing a big field at Lingfield on his second and final start as a trouncing a log read at Linguess on his section and that start este two-year-old. He showed a smart turn of foot that day and reproduced it on his comeback at the Craven meeting when, despite being far from fully wound up, he won a minor event over seven furlongs in decisive fashion.

The extra furlong he will tackle on Saturday looks well within his compass and the First Trump colt is talking no more a step up in class then such as Island Sands and Alrassaem ~ much shorter-priced rivals. The anticipated good going will suit him ideally and, as a considerable bonus, Olivier Pesiler, arguably the world's finest big-race jockey, will be in the saddle.

Toe betide the rac-ing professional who casts aspersions on the Derby, as André Fabre now discovers to his cost. Fabre's blummess often veers towards insolence; his dismissal of British racing's showpiece event was bound to cause offence to those who have successfully revived the Derby as a top sporting spectacle.

Mind you, Fabre, the perennial champion trainer in France, will care not a jot about the backlash. This is a man whose aloofness has offended many — not least French racing officials, with whom he is perpetually in conflict. He can be contemptuous in the extreme, and he remains the only man in racing to have truly confronted Sheikh Mohammed. That he did so over the future of Pennekamp, his outstanding 2,000 Guineas winner of 1995. is peculiarly relevant to the present Derby debate.

Pennekamp started a redhot favourite for the Derby, in which he was to suffer a career-ending injury. Fabre evidently feared as much beforehand, highlighting the colt's far-from-perfect front legs as an inherent weakness. Nevertheless, the esteem in which Fabre beld Pennekamp doubtless fortified him for his stand-off with the sheikh, who, in Godolphin's formative years, wanted Pennekamp to winter in Dubai after his successful juvenile season. Fabre's response was to declare that if Pennekamp left his stable, so, too, should all the others in the sheikh's ownership. The colt duly wintered in France.

Pennekamp's presence at Epsom reflected Fabre's preoccupation with the blue riband. This obsessioo was fired by two legacies of history: that the Derby was the world's greatest race, but more importantly, that it was the benchmark of excellence as decreed by oumerous influential breeders of their time. It was Federico Tesio, a giant amongst hreeders, who declared that the piece of wood denoting the winning post of the Derby was the sport's most important signpost.

A decade ago, when Fabre consented to the occasional interview, he would amplify one ambition above all others including winning the Derby. He desperately wanted to train a horse that would impose itself as a truly outstanding stallion. At the time he felt that those twin peaks were inextricably linked; that the Derby would identify the horse who would subsequeotly spawn a dynasty of rare brilliance. He plainly does not think that now. As much was evident when be bypassed the Derby with Peintre Celebre, who instead won the Prix du Jockey-Club (French Derby) and Prix de l'Arc de Triomphe two seasons back. Indeed, of the three criticisms Fabre laid at the Derby door, only one is contentious. It is a fact that the race is hard oo three-year-

Rassi champion sire for more than years, a disappointing detail even allowing for the export to Japan of four winners over a five-year period from 1991

What triggered the scorn heaped on Fabre was his third assertion: that the Derby only survives on its reputation. In this respect, condemnation of Fabre has been made out of context. He was not rubbishing the racing merit of Derby winners hut their collective indifference as stallions. Hence the redundance of Epsom's recent use of International Classification ratings to illustrate that the Derby is indeed alive and kicking.

Of that there is no doubt $ The Derby is still the ultimate test of a three-year-old. It may be brutal, but it has ever been thus. It is an event whose meaning is only really conferred in the moment of victory. Like the Grand National it remains an integral part of our heritage despite its waning influence as a source of outstanding sires.

n that respect it might have been so different had Sadier's Wells, the outstanding stallion in Europe, been allowed his chance in the 1984 Derby won hy Secreto. He would have gone close at Epsom: his next two starts saw him plunder the Eclipse Stakes before leading home his contemporaries when second to Time Charter in the King George VI & Queen Elizabeth Diamond

It is genuinely sad that the Derby's allure has dimmed for Fabre, the outstanding & trainer in Europe over the past decade. It is sad, too, that the strong purist's streak within him apparently leads him away from Epsom in his quest for a stallioo par excellence. Merely winning the Derby is not enough, which goes a long way towards explaining why Fabre is somewhat disparagingly referred to as "God" by the Newmarket set.

Nick Szczepanik on an LTA scheme offering net gains to young and old nly a few short weeks ago, a vast television audience (apart from those who could not bear to look) watched the Davis Cup tie between Great Britain and the United States and thrilled to the quality of the tennis, the intensity of the competition and the drama of the occasion. So much for the accusation that the British only notice tennis during Wimbledon fortnight.

The Lawn Tennis Association (LTA) hopes that the interest engendered by that tie can be channelled into Play Tennis 99. eight days of events aimed at broadening the base of the game in Britain by providing free access to the best facilities and coaches. From May 1 to 8. Britain's biggest tennis promo-oon offers players of all ages and levels of experience free coaching. skillstesting and competitions at centres in every leading town and city in Britain.

"We want to maximise the interest in the sport generated by the recent efforts of Tim Henman and Greg Rusedski during their memorable Davis Cup tie and encourage more people to take up tennis and enjoy the game for years to come," John Crowther, the chief executive

· of the LTA, said. More than 72,000 people in 1,000 clubs and centres participated in Play Tennis 98 and the LTA has invited 2.700 clubs, 2,500 schools, 2,800 coaches and 570 local authorities to take part this year. Eighteen thousand of the par-icipants last year were newomers to the sport and more han 80 per cent were under 8, Almost 9,000 signed up for essons as a result. Jim Courier, of the United states, whose performances in he Davis Cup proved deciive, said in one of his postnatch press conferences: Great Britain is really lucky ou should see a lot of kids vanting to pick up a racket and go out there and play."

Apart from the obvious need o foster new talent and un-arth Davis and Fed Cup stars of the future, the week seeks to ntroduce as many players as possible to the benefits of oaching and to remind others if the enjoyment to be had rom the game. Each of the ight days of the programme eatures a different theme, inluding a family day, "rusty ackets", aimed at those who rave not played recently, "evergreens", for those aged 50 or older, and "anyone can play". for disabled players.

Performance at the top end is important to our aims as an organisation, but another objective is to get more people playing more regularly, not just during Wimbledon fornight," Heidi Cohu, of the LTA, said.

We're not just looking for beginners. A lot of our work is about broadening the base, as with any sport. The more people that take part, the more likely you are to unearth talent, and our job is 10 identify that talent and nurture it as best we can. We can't make champions, but we can give them the best opportunioes to develop." Promising young be-ginners could find themselves among a final 18 selected for a day of training at the All England Club.

One useful spin-off of the programme will be to make occasional, or "re-ored" players aware of the improved facilities now available and to retain their involvement. It is also hoped to extend awareness of the growing number of indoor facilities, which ensure that there is no need to wait for the strawberries to ripen before getting the racket out.

Even though not all of the centres involved will be running events on every day, each has been selected for its ability to give a proper welcome to the sport for the numbers expected to attend, as well as being able to offer a continuing involvement through coaching and access to facilities. Some centres will boast the added attraction of celebrity support: Henman, Sam Smith, the Britain women's No I, Frank Bruno, from the boxing world, Scott Gibbs and Gary Armstrong, the British Isles rugby players, and William Roach, the Coronation Street actor, will be attending names, added to the excitement created by the Davis Cup tie, should push the number of participants throughout the country as high as 100,000.

For a list of venues and information about registration, there is an LTA information line. Details can also be found on the LTA website.

Mel Webb profiles

f casting about for a race noted for its eccentricity, the mind's eye would travel a long way down the list until it alighted on the Swedish and, even then, would move rapidly on. What a neat little paradox it was, then, that when two of their professional golfers created a small moment in sporting history on Sunday, they were the very two who would stand out in any crowd up to and including circus perforners:

Which is not to say that either Jesper Parnevik or Jarmo Sandelin are figures of fun. Quirky they may be, unortho-dox in dress and style they assuredly are, but with a set of clubs in their hands, a course on which to play and beat and they are as deadly serious as anybody.

So it was not an earth-shattering surprise when Parnevik won the Greater Greensboro Classic in North Carolina on Sunday, nor was it a shock when Sandelin took the Peugeot Spanish Open at El Prat on the outskirts of Barcelona. What marks their achieve-ment is that they prevailed on the same day — the first time that Swedes have had simulta-neous victories on the two strongest tours in the world.

The two of them, tall and slim, Parnevik, 34, and Sandelin, 31, share a penchant for designer clothing. Of course, Parnevik has his trademark upturned brim on his cap (sorry, Jesper, it still looks daft, but at least you don't wear it back to front). Then there are the tight-fitting trousers and Meanwhile, over the weekend in Spain, Sandelin sported shirts that were pure early-Seventies Cliff Richard white with six-inch points on the collar on Saturday, a green towelling number with a zip-up neck on Sunday that would have looked just right by the swimming pool at his home in Monaco but all wrong on a golf course. Walking clotheshorses they are, both of them. Their differences, if only in career profiles, are as marked as their similarities. Parnevik went to the United States in 1996 and has made an outstanding success of it — his win put him back in the world top 20 at No 17-whereas San-delin's one foray into American territory, also in 1996. brought a long string of missed cuts and humiliadon. Parnevik's victory was his second in the United States and his prize of $480,000 (about £290,000) brought his samings for the season to $728,598. By comparison, Sandelin's £100,000 prize, the third winner's cheque of his career, took his prize-money this year to a comparatively modest £138,972. The European Tour might still be the place to cut teeth as a tournament professional, but the United States is still where the crock of gold is.

The target for both men is the Ryder Cup and in this contest Sandelin has a comfortable lead. His victory pushed him into fifth place in the Ry-der Cup table, whereas al-though Parnevik has rejoined the European Tour. he has yet to commit himself to playing enough tournaments to qualify by prize-money alone.

In 1997, Parnevik had to rely on a wild-card selection but Mark James, the captain this year, will need a lot of convincing before he does that. James will expect at least for Parnevik to show good form in Eu-rope before he puts his name down in his little black book. Sandelin is doing things the right way. He is playing with more confidence and authority than he has ever done and a lace is his for the winning. His performance last week was that of a mature and capable tournament player. If he gets on Concorde in Septem-ber with 11 others, he will feel himself, for the first time, to be

Kent lead the way as revolution begins match will be a two-day affair

THE consequences of a grassroots revolution in English club cricket come into effect on Saturday, when most of the leading leagues in the country begin their programme for the new season. Ten leagues have been accorded Premiership status by the England and Wales Cricket Board (ECB), whose target of double that number may be reached by next year.

The need to reorganise league cricket was first officially mooted in Raising the Standard in 1997. By proposing a lengthening of games and by insisting on declara-tions and possible draws rather than limited overs, it was felt. correctly, that players would have a better chance of bridging the gap between club

The ECB decided that it wanted matches of at least 120 overs, which would therefore have to start in the morning rather than around lunchtime. There was, and still is, opposition in some leagues to that concept as there are players who work on Saturday mornings, but the ECB was ada-mant that if leagues wanted Premier League status - and with it the grant of £1,000 for each club - its criteria would have to be met.

The vast majority of league cricketers are happy with the changes, even though it means both a drawn-out day and potentially longer in the field. Caps, though, have been put on the number of overs that a side batting first can receive. In the Surrey championship, for example, no side can batfor more than 66 overs, leaving the other 54.

The likelihood is, however, that the better teams, if they are not bowled out, will CHICKET IS Club Commentary By Geoffrey Dean

ers being Birmingham and District, Cheshire, East Anglia, Essex, Kent, Middlesex, West of England, Sussex and Yorkshire. Smaller ECB grants are being given to two so-called Premier Elect Leagues, which meet some of the board's criteria for premier status (pyramid structures with promotion and relegation) but not the key one of 120 overs. These are Nottinghamshire and Northamptonshire, which are likely to be joined next year by, among others, Derbyshire and Devon. The board has given bigger grants of £2,000 to clubs that formed the new Regional Premier (as opposed to county) Leagues of East Anglia and West of England. Clearly, clubs needed extra financial help with the high costs in competing over such a wide area. The West of England League is drawn from Somer-Gloucestershire and Wiltshire.

The biggest grant of all, £4,000 per club, has been given to the Kent League for

spread over two weekends, as in Australian grade cricket. Outright wins, with extra points, will be achieved by bowling a side out twice or by reaching a target in the fourth innings. In the event of a draw, first-innings points are awarded. To confuse matters, though, the side batting on the first day must adjourn its innings at tea, even if not bowled out. Side B will then but for the last session and side A will be able to resume its first innings at the start of play the next weekend. The idea is to ensure that both teams bat and bowl on each day.

Coote to benefit from Irish exodus

By George Caulkin

A VERY fine line separates bold experimentation from complete exasperation and the Northern Ireland manager, Lawrie McMenemy, has taken a large stride over it. With 11 players withdrawing from the international against Canada at Windsor Park tonight, much scope for manocuvre has aiready been curtailed. As a matter of urgency. would any fit male contact the Irish Football Association.

James Quinn, the West Bromwich Albion striker, became the eighth member of McMenemy's full squad to send his apologies yesterday, joining the ailing Keith Gillespie. Neil Lennon. Damien Johnson, Steve Morrow and Alan Fettis. Stephen Robinson and Peter Kennedy have been allowed to remain with their clubs, while three players have stood down from the stand-by list.

As a consequence, a brave face and a fresh face were revealed by McMenemy yester-day, both designed to deflect concern over a Euro 2000 qualifying campaign that has descended into farce. A combination of Quinn's absence and a dearth of goals — three in the past five games — en-sure a newish attacking partnership. Adrian Coote, of Norwich City, a recent graduate from the under-21 team, makes his debut alongside the lingering Iain Dowie.

"We all know that we need goals," McMenemy said. "I want to see how people like Adrian Coote react to the bigger stage. I want to see if there are any positives from him that might help us in our three remaining games."

The Reading defender. Barry Hunter, returns to international football after a sapping two-year battle against injury.

The contrast with Canada, ranked 92nd in the world, could not be more striking. While their coach, Holger Osieck, was able to select a young, 18-man squad - the majority of whom are based in England, Scotland or freland - only Carlo Corrazin. of Northampton Town, is absent with injury.

PFA Player of the Year holds award in high regard, says Matt Dickinson

Ginola humbled by his honour

Viying back into Paris on holiday recently, David Ginola was greeted by a porter. "So what," the man inquired, "are you up to now you've retired from football?" He will get his answer this morning when he sees Ginola, dressed in a tuxedo and wearing a look of vindication, draped across his morning paper.

A mobbing by journalists from France came quickly yesterday on the back of Ginola's success in being voted the Professional Footballers' Association Player of the Year. A less charming and media-aware person than the Tottenham Hotspur winger might have told them all to disappear back down the Channel Tunnel. After all, the press have hardly been waging a campaign for him to be restored to the national team since his exile began in 1993.

The opportunity to re-establish himself in his home country was too good to miss, how-ever, so the 32-year-old sat and talked, although only, of course, after George Graham had allowed him to leave training. Player of the Year or not. no one slacks when Graham is their manager.

Even a man as accustomed to the place of television cameras, studio lights and flashbulbs seemed somewhat overwhelmed by the avalanche of interest yesterday. "It is a great honour," he kept repeating, but what soon became obvious was that the recognition of his fellow players, as op-posed to that of the media, had genuinely touched him.

Not because he has anything against the written press, but because it shattered the notion that he was regarded within football as a bit of a foreign sissy, a skilful player who could not cope with being kicked in the air, a man too worried about his hair to throw himself into tackles.

Only this Saturday, the Frenchman was suffering more gibes when Steve Lomas mocked the Spurs players for trying to start a fight. "Half of them would have bottled out anyway," the West Ham United player said, and it was clear which half he thought Ginola

But far from becoming embittered by the provocation, Ginota has been spurred into some of the best performances of his career and will figure more than once in the shortlist for goal of the season. His per-

It is not the first time that Ginola has won such an award. He won the equivalent in France when he was with Paris Saint-Germain in 1993-94 and received an honour arguably as great as any this season when Johan Cruyff declared him the best player in the

As well as the self-promotion that will come with the trophy, and a possible pay rise from his many sponsors, Ginola will he able to use the publicity to project the charitable causes for which he works. As an ambassador for the Red Cross campaigning against landmines, he is helping to set up a match at White Hart Lane on May 19 to raise money for Kosovo refugees.

He will also hope that it . helps his own cause when it comes to sitting down with his main employers this summer and negotiating a new contract. He has two years left on his present deal and likes London enough after the "small-village mentality" of Newcastle to seek an extension.

"If I am not certain I am wanted, then I will go straight away," he said in an interview recently. His fellow professionals have declared their feelings. Now it is up to Graham and Alan Sugar to do the same.

haunt Brown's build-up

By KEVIN McCarra

WHAT benefit can Scotland gain from the match with Germany in Bremen tomorrow? "We hope to prove the strength in depth of our squad," Craig Brown, the manager, said. Given his choice of reactions, he preferred to be wry. The alternative would have been exasperation, ft is normal for Sentland to find their possibilities whittled away, but the present circumstances threaten to reduce them to sawdust.

When naming his party an entire possible team, with a couple of substitutes to spare. was unavailable through injury. Now, the survivors are being picked off. Craig Burley, Matt Elliott, David Hop-kin, Neil McCann and Jackie McNamara did not survive the weekend matches for their clubs and all withdrew yesterday. Plausible replacements are as scarce as men in husky health and Brown made just one addition to the squad.

The eligibility of Colin Cameron, of Heart of Midlothian, may owe something to the fact that he has only lately returned after missing most of this season with a persistent pelvic strain.

The ministrations of a French osteopath brought about his recovery, but the midfield player had not expected promotion to his country's colours and is at present without his passport. It has been submitted with an application for the visa that he will need to visit in-laws in the Middle East this summer. In addition to collecting his boots from Tynecastle, he also had to acquire a temporary passport yesterday morning.

It is Brown's intention to keep a core of experience in the team and, where the starting line-up is concerned, he will limit the number of experiments. Neither of the uncapped goalkeepers. Alan Main and Robert Douglas, is expected to make his debut since Brown feels that Neil Sullivan would benefit from a prolonged, hair-raising exposure to the Germans.

There are, however, certain changes that the manager is bound to make. Last month, Scotland lost a European championship qualifying tie to the Czech Republic, their first defeat at home in a championship match since 1987. The status quo cannot survive untouched in such circum-

A TAKEOVER of Umbro, the sports manufacturer, has placed a question mark over the Manchester-based company's multimillion-pound boot and clothing deals with Alan Shearer and Michael Owen. which were signed only last year. Advisers acting for both players are understood to be seeking clarification over the buyout.

After months of speculation over its future and a financial restructuring. Umbro con-firmed yesterday that it had been bought for £90 million by Doughty Hanson, an independent fund management company. The new owner is expected to continue to develop

FOOTBALL IN BRIEF Richards takes office

■ DAVE RICHARDS, the Sheffield Wednesday chairman, was installed as the chairman of the FA Premier League yesterday. His appointment came after a meeting of the chairmen from the Premier League's 20 clubs. Richards had been acting chairman since the enforced resignations of Sir John Quinton, the former chairman, and Peter Leaver, the former chief executive. who left after agreeing a deal concerning television rights

players from Wimbledon votwithout the consultation of the clubs. ■ Newcastle United are vying with Middlesbrough for the signature of Oleg Luzhny, the Dynamo Kiev defender. A Newcastle delegation, including Ruud Gullit, the manager, was in London yesterday negotiating personal terms

Luzhny has already spoken to Bryan Robson, the Middlesbrough manager, about a possible move.

Liverpool have initiated moves, to bring Vladimir Smicer, the Czech Republic international, to Anfield. Gerard Houllier, the Liverpool manager, has targeted Smicer, who plays for Lens, as a replacement for Steve McManaman, who will ioin Real Madrid at the end of the season.

Mike Dean, the referee. has reported Bristol City to the Football Association after the violent scenes that marred the end of their Nationwide League first division home defeat by Birmingham City on Saturday. Dean claims that both he and his two assistants were hit by coins thrown from the home fans' end as they left the pitch.

Success of Jeffers provides incentive for latest crop

BY NICK SZCZEPANIK

LAST season Francis Jeffers played in the Everton team that won The Times FA Youth Cup, beating Blackburn Rovers in the two-leg final. Today he is in Hungary with the full England squad. Tonight four teams will contest the second legs of the Youth Cup semi-finals and their players will be dreaming of following Jeffers's lead.

One player who would appear to have a good chance of emulating Jeffers one day is Gary McSheffrey, of Coventry City, who play Newcastle United at Highfield Road tonight. In the first leg at St James' Park last week, McSheffrey, 16, who lives locally, scored a hat-trick as, Coventry beat the home side and fortunately he did in the first leg." Richard Money. Coventry's academy director, said. The fourth was scored by Craig Strachan, son of the City manager, Gordon.

"He's one of those boys who can catch fire at any moment

Twelve months ago Jeffers had aiready made an appearance as a substitute in the FA Carling Premiership. McSheffrey has been on the fringe of Strachan's first-team squad, along with Chris Kirkland and Gerry Mooney, who both missed the first leg but are in the reckoning for the game, which will be a formality, surely.

kicking you in the teeth." That would be some kick for a team holding a four-goal advan-tage. 'We were delighted to was much more than we expected, but as the game went on, we deserved it."

The other likely finalists are West Ham United, who take a -3-0 lead over Everton to Goodison Park tonight. The scorers in the first leg at Upton Park included two graduates of their Australian academics, Michael Ferrante and Richard Garcia, while Joe Cole, who is widely regarded as the most promising teenager in the country, has played several first-team games.

"I've seen West Ham a couple of times, and we've had Everton watched," Money said, showing how seriously clubs take this competition. We think they're both good

SOME fathers buy their sons a Scalextric set; Richard Branson bought his boy London Broncos. There will be no prouder figure in the royal box at Wembley on Saturday than Branson Jr as dad leads out his team for the Silk Cut Challenge Cup final.

The cameras will flash, Branson will blush accordingty and the Broncos, in branded red shirts like tins of Virgin cola, will get dented and bashed by the bigger Leeds Rhinos forwards. But, who knows, they may get the chance to douse their famous chairman in celebratory champagne at the end.

it's a dream come true, an historic day for rugby league in the South, and we're going to enjoy it to the full. I'm conscious that many people are willing the team on," Branson said. The world's most incorrigible self-publicist could not have scripted it better.

but come up smiling, as he always does. The Broncos have gone farther than anyone dared hope. raised a flag for rugby league in the South, and will have every "neutral" behind them at Wembley

Unlike other club owners. Branson, in his mildly eccentric but endearing way, talked this week about "supporting the underdog". Spoken like a man of the people. Yet where all this is leading the Broncos is hard to fathora. Branson's-80 per cent co-ownership has inderwritten the club's debt average last season. Bad mar-

but fails to translate into the sums necessary to drive this small corner of his empire forward in the true sense. The Broncos, after all, boast a few Portakabins at the on-hire Stoop Memorial Ground and not much besides.

Branson has no immediate plans to increase his commitment. Having reached giddier heights with the Broncos than he did during his helium-powered flights, there may be an argument for baling out soon-er rather than later. London are unlikely to enjoy again the publicity that they are getting now and there is the precedent of Branson withdrawing his money from Crystal Palace after they lost to Manchester United in the 1990 FA Cup Final replay.

Rugby league, he insisted, is, although if Sam Branson had fancied basketball it is arguable that London Towers would have been the beneficiaries. "To me, rugby league is the most spectacular sport to watch," Branson said. "Unlike football, it is far from its peak.

"I really feel it is going onwards and upwards, particularly with the television agreement with BSkyB. More and more people are watching and getting into the sport. I was converted through my family and it's a great family spectacle."

That has not been the experience since London memorably beat Castleford Tigers in the semi-final last month. The aggregate attendance for the three home matches leading up to Wembley has been a feeble 9,500, which is below the female Broncos supporter writing in Rugby League Express yesterday. With the exception of posters in a dozen or so stiops around Twickenham and a very uninspiring news-paper advert, no visible marketing to new fans has gone on since the semi-final. Existing fans have been bombarded by shoddy, second-rate promotions, about squeezing every penny from faithful support-

SHAUN EDWARDS intends to play in a record eleventh Silk Cut Challenge Cup final, but Dan Stains, the Londoo Broncos coach, is erring on the side of cantion regarding his captain's broken thumb (Christopher Irvine writes).

Stains yesterday named both Edwards and Glen Air at scrum half for Saturday. "We. will make a decision when we know more about Shaun's

May 9 will be watched with interest. For Branson, who was talked through the final few minutes of the semi-final on a mobile telephone at his island retreat in the Caribbean, the experience was "better than whale-watching". As to those who see a London victory as a case of flying pig-watching, Branson could end up with his trademark last laugh. "We're greedy. We'll want to go back Wembley next year," he said. Not quite, as the 2000 final will be in Edinburgh. But you know what he means.

RUGBY UNION

Gloucester go for power of Paramore

By David Hands, Rugby correspondent

BEDFORD'S unanimity of spirit in difficult circumstances has been one of the heartwarming features of this season, but the first crack appeared in their wall yesterday when Junior Paramore signed a three-year contract with Gloucester. Where the Samoan has gone, will others, such as Scott Murray, be far behind?

Paramore, 30, is the first of half-dozen signings that Gloucester hope to make within the next month to bolster the ambition of Tom Walkinshaw, their chairman, for a place among England's leading clubs next season. Since the existing squad is to be re-duced from 33 to 28 at the same time, it follows that ten players could follow Scott Benton on to the transfer list. Paramore, a back-row forward who has, since 1996, been part of Bedford's rise to the first division of the Allied Dunbar Premiership, will join Terry Fanolua, his cous-in, at Kingsholm and will be available to them from the first day of the season. A neck operation that is due to be performed next Tuesday prevents Paramore concluding this campaign with Bedford and from joining Western Samoa in the Pacific Rim tournament next mooth and he has been ruled out, therefore, of his country's World Cup squad. Fanolua, a centre, has a ligament injury and could find himself in the same situation.

Gloucester will not qualify for Europe next season, but Hartequins can after their victory over Saracens on Sunday. Zinzan Brooke, their play er-coach, who was carried off with a neck injury, was released from hospital after X-rays and was at the Stoop Memorial Ground yesterday, aibeit suffering from discomfort similar to that created by a whiplash injury.

The club will talk with Wil

Carling, the former England captain, about an extension of his playing career when his short-term, 14-week contract concludes next month. "Will is enjoying his rugby and we will see whether he wants to go on and whether we want him to do so," John Gallagher, the director of rugby, said.

Gareth Liewellyn, the Harlequins lock and Wales's most-capped forward, is likely to be called into the Wales party to tour Argentina next month. Liewellyn. 30, who has not played international rugby since the defeat by England last seasoo, is on standby to replace Ian Gough, of Pontypridd. who broke his arm at the weekend. Wales will take three un-capped players -- Ian Boobyer, Rhodri Jones and Richard Arnold - on the tour, although Graham Henry, the coach, has decided against taking several of his under-21 squad, who pay their own visit to Argentina later in the summer. "We decided that all 37 should be genuioe contenders for a place in the World Cup squad," Henry said.

Ireland, who tour Australia next month, will be without Cooor McGuinness, the St Mary's College scrum half. He needs an operation on his left foot

Declarer won the jack of hearts at trick one and ran the ten of diamonds to West's jack. Glowacki switched to the jack of spades. We can see that this switch is harmless as the spades lie, but the Czech declarer didn't know the position. From his point of view, taking the second diamond finesse now risked the contract. If the nine of diamonds lost to the king the defence might have been able to take up to five spade tricks. Having been given a trick on the opening lead. declarer didn't want to take this chance. Instead, placing East with the ace of spades, he tried to endplay him to lead away from it. He won the queen of spades, cashed four top clubs and two top hearts, and finally played are and another diamond, hoping to drop the king or find East left with king and another diamond, and ace and another spade. He must have been shocked to see East play a spade back to West's ace for him to cash his long heart. That held declarer to nine tricks and a bottom score for North-South.

SNOOKER: MAVERICK PLAYS SAFE TO ADVANCE TO QUARTER-FINAL AGAINST PARROTT

O'Sullivan grows in confidence

THE tabloid journalists waited, camped in the front row of the interview room. What would Ronnie O'Sullivan say this time? Repeat his intention to retire, or maybe describe in great detail how depressed he continues to feel with the game and life in general?

"I'm a lot happier and getting more and more confident all the time." O'Sullivan said after completing a I3-8 victory over Joe Perry to earn a place in the quarter-finals of the Embassy world championship at the Crucible Theatre. Sheffield, yesterday.

Once again O'Sullivan's mood swings off the table proved as unpredictable as his form on it. "The practice I put in before the championship is beginning to pay off and, in phases. I'm starting to feel really good," he said. "I've gul most of my troubles away now," he said.

the dejected stance that he adupted after a 10-3 win over Leo Fernandez in the first round. O'Sullivan often finds mutivation difficult to generate and withdrew from two events earlier this season, the United Kingdom championship and German Masters, citing "physical and mental exhuastion". However, those who dismiss him as a realistic contender for the world title underestimate his innate skill.

Some of O'Sullivan's answers were clearly more considered, such as the respectful comments reserved for John Parrott, his quarter-final opponent. They have met on eight previous occasions and Parrott has prevailed six times, including a 13-4 landslide in the last 16 tif the 1994 world championship. "Juhn is a great player and one of the toughest there is to beat. I'll have to tighten up to stand any chance of beating him but I'm definitely feeling more comfortable with the surroundings here," O'Sullivan said.

In converting a 9-7 overnight lead over Perry, O'Sullivan eschewed risky showmanship in favour of a more workmanlike approach, although he did compile breaks of 72 and 42 in moving 12-8 ahead.

O'Sullivan: contender

Perry, who battled hard without ever quite threatening to repeat his surprise win over Steve Davis, led 62-9 in the 21st frame with only three reds remaining. O'Sullivan laid the snooker he needed on the last red, Perry failed to escape and O'Sullivan fashioned a 35 clearance to steal it on the

With Perry's departure, Nick Walker, the world Nn 71 from Chester, became the last unknown in the event but he also perished, beaten 13-7 by Mark Williams. The Welshman, who has already won the Irish Open, Welsh Open and Thailand Masters this season has matured into a fearsome

"I've got as good a shout as anyone left in the championship and I am sure that I'll never arrive here in a better frame of mind than this year." Williams, who won all four frames necessary in the session, said.

Williams advances to meet Ken Doherty, his conqueror in the semi-finals last year.

Stephen Hendry, six times the world champion, played himself into a position of strength entering his final session against James Wattana last night, while Stephen Lee, enjoying a commanding 11-5 advantage over Alan Mc-Manus, alsn appeared to be bound for the quarter-finals.

Wattana held Hendry at 7-7, spectacularly accounting for the twelfth frame with a 110 clearance, but with a vintage response to danger, Hendry won the closing two frames of the afternoon with contributions of 90 and 61 to afford himself some breathing space

"That's the disadvantage of being tail, but I am not going to cut off any limbs just to get under the weight even though some people say I could have an operation to make me shurter."

With surgery sensibly ruled out, the target for the engineers at the Benetton factory at Enstone, in Oxfordshire, is to examine each individual component in the car to discover whether they can shave even the merest few ounces. "If you can make a part just five grams lighter, it is a small contribution to getting rid of that 20 kilos," Wurz said. "We have to do it if I am going to have a chance this season."

Wurz's height has led to no end of problems in trying to make the optimum weight for grand prix racing

BBC2, 7.30pm

Poet and performer Linton Kwesi Johnston reflects on 25 years of black campaigning. He covers many of the same themes explored in his poetry tackling issues such as equality, justice and corruption. Johnson argues that the time is right to set up an independent black political organisation to highlight injustices. Although he admits much has been achieved over the years thanks to political campaigns, he warms against complacency. "As we enter the 21st century," he says, "we cannot afford to be complacent in the face of discrimination that simply won't go away. simply won't go away.

A new series taking the sartorial approach to social history gives us this colourful but ulomately slightly unsatisfying scamper through the evolution of the gentlemen's suit from the 1950s to today. Heavily reliant on quotes from now-dead style magazines, it touches on such matters as the rite-of-passage that was your first made-to-measure suit (for the first job, wedding, etc), how high street tailors such as Burton dominated the scene for those beyond the Savile Row pale, and how extreme styles, materials and bright colours came to visit in the 1960s and never went away, although today's desirate suits are generally more although today's designer suits are generally mure like those of the 1950s and 1960s than those of the intervening decades. Bound to provoke embar-rassment among male viewers of a certain age, and howls of laughter among their juniors and

Whicker's New World

Radio 2, 10pm

The New World is, of course, the United States. Many Britons have chosen to senic down there and Alan Whicker has traced a handful of them who made it to the top. With characteristic exaggeration, he says these expatriates were practically running things in Washington. Nevertheless, it is true that "a handsome divorce" from Hereford became head of protocol for the House of Representatives' Foreign Affairs Committee, and that an English professor, who had these American wides taught American had three American wives, taught American university students the history of their own country. I wonder why Whicker didn't interview any expatriate Britons who were many rungs lower on the ladder of success. Peter Davalle ower on the ladder of success.

When blonde ambition isn't quite enough But in spite of this. Dors - ever wood's reigning blonde. Few have what it takes. ITV's biopic. The Blonde Bombshell charting Diana Dors's struggle 10 get Hollywood's studio bosses 10 confirm her as Britain's answer to Marilyn Monroe, was a reminder of just how difficult it can be to make the grade — even when your bust is so big that sleeping on your front becomes impossible unless you have a head for heights.

By chance, it was shown just a few days after one of the most recent applicants for the crown, the improbably outsized Pamela Anderson, decided to deflate herself back to her God-given dimensions. The former Playboy model's decision to rethink her image may also have had something to do with the response to her big screen debut, Barb Wire. 'Acting is not yet in Anderson's repertoire," said The Times. The Guardian thought "the whole thing resembles Mad Max ed sexuality". Ouch!

Can anyone actually remember a film that Diana Dors was in? I cannot recall ever having seen her in a rainy Sunday afternoon repeat. I just about remember her she must have been in her late forties or early fifties by then — as a contestant on celebrity quiz shows: bloated like an over-pumped tyre, with icing-white hair, she looked less like Britain's answer to Marilyn Monroe than Britain's answer Elvis Presley. She was certainly no Jean Harlow, let alone a Kim Novak or Grace Kelly. You cannot imagine Alfred Hitchcock, who hated "the obvious blonde", pestering Diana Dors to come for a screen test for Rear Window. Ephraim Katz, the film historian, said of Dors that "the public remained largely apathetic toward her frank, exaggerat-as a chat show guest - had that something that made her stand out from the pack: a luminous smile, and a sauciness that stopped just - just! - short of cheap. Pulling off such a cheesy act takes a rare talent. Selling it is a highwire act. Pretending to have it is like performing that same high-wire act blindfold. This gives you some idea of just how big was the mountain that Keeley Hawes had to climb as the junior Dors (Amanda Redman takes over as Dors senior in tonight's second instalment).

ow Hawes is blessed with a buxom body, enhanced here by a bra that left her breasts pointing out into the world like two searchlights. This left her in the awkward situation of having to act like a cocquettish 14-year-old - the age at which Diana Dors made her first film -when Hawes clearly no longer posREVIEW

sesses the body of a teenager. So while trying to hint at what it was that the world saw in Dors (this was the easy bit), Hawes also had to shrink herself a little to try to look like a schoolgiri - the way tall women married to short men develop a subconscious stoop over the years to camouflage the disparity in their heights. It brings no shame to Keeley Hawes to say that she doesn't quite have the cheesy sauciness bordering on tarriness that was part of Dors's DNA: if she did she would probably be competing for roles with Pamela Anderson rather than appearing — very watchably — in TV adaptations of Our Mutual Friend. Sexiness should fall like leaves from a tree. Here everyone was trying just that bit too hard. And Rupert Graves, for all his shouding and punching, still seemed just that bit too smooth a diamond to be Diana's first husband, Dennis Hamilton. The production was sumptuous -- in fact so sumptuous that the vintage cars and immaculate 1950s artefacts all looked exactly like the lovingly nursed period props they are. It ran for two hours, but rarely exuded the brassy, backstreet sexiness which fertilised Dors's career.

But if many things went wrong in Diana Dors's life, at least she had the good fortune not to be born pretty and Swedish. In appearing Doctors (Channe) 4), we met Elsie Soderburg. She is one of the many hapless victims of Sweden's recently exposed eugenics programme, which ran from 1935 to 1975. The Swedes thought the smart way to rid the population of the genetically ill. of unsuitable parents and of the feeble-minded. was to sterilise them: also, the welfare state was in its infancy, and the State didn't want the dependants of these unsavoury types taking advantage of it.

53,000 people, almost all of them were O Sweden sterilised some them women, and workingclass. Doctors willingly took part in this well-intentioned barbarity. But Elsie wasn't even one of the many unmarried pregnant girls who were sterilised in return for being given properly conducted aboroons. Etsie's crime was being prei-ty: the State feared that with a face up to hanky-panky sooner rather than later, thereby burdening society with unwanted children. So they did what any demented government might do: they sterilised her. She was 16. Later. Elsie became a prostitute.

Tracked down by the film's director. Fisher Dilke, the now retired Elsiestill cannot work out why she was chosen to be cursed by the State. "You don't feel you are worth as much as other people." she tells him. "You lose your pride as a human being." The sterilisa-tions were repealed in 1975 not because doctors rebelled but because Swedish feminists demanded the right to abortion and because of the arrival of the contracepove pill. It makes you wonder what those Stockholm bureaucrats would have done after one glimpse of Diana Dors's cleavage. Especially once they found out she wasn't even a natural blonde.

Keegan asks England to dig deep

THE Danube was looking a dirty shade of green yesterday, so it seemed fitting that the England squad should arrive here feeling blue. Depleted beyond measure and nervous because of the proximity of war-torn Yugoslavia it was left to Kevin Keegan to try to accentuate the positives of a trip that is flirting with farce. He made a good

Wearing his heart on his sleeve as usual, the England caretaker manager suggested that the country's pampered footballers should look at the bigger picture and donate part of their match fee for the international against Hungary tomorrow night to Kosovan refu-

It might only be a gesture, but it would be a beginning, a guarantee that whatever else happened in the run-up to a troubled fixture that nobody seems to want. England could at least go home with something to Match fees are not yet as inflated as the players' salaries and are cal-culated on a sliding scale that takes account of experience and participation in the match. It is still thought that the total given to charity may amount to £30,000. Keegan's urgings are almost certain to be ratified by the players' committee this morning.

"It is just something I believe we should do," Keegan said, "a gesture to show that we care. We are entering into an area and there is a war going on next door. This is definitely something that the England football team needs to do and I will seek out Alan Shearer and the other senior players to discuss it with them.

This, of course, is Keegan's forte, the ability to turn bad into good, to sense what is the best thing to do in an emotive situation, to avoid being niggardly. He eschews circumspection and compromise and thrives on spontaneity. In this situation, he FROM OLIVER HOLT, FOOTBALL CORRESPONDENT, IN BUDAPEST is exactly what his green-gilled squad needs.

Most of all, he insisted yesterday that the match tomorrow was brimming with opportunities for the young players, who have inherited their places in the squad because of the mass withdrawals that have given it such an unfamiliar, inexperienced look. Added to the six players who pulled out because of assorted injuries over the weekend. Manchester United and Arsenal had already been allowed to declare David Beckham, Gary Neville, Ray Parlour and Tony Adams unavailable.

All that means that there will be new caps tomorrow. Keegan said that he would announce the team after training this morning and that his side would include at least two "youngsters". Either Kevin Phillips, the Sunderland striker, or Emile Heskey, of Leicester City, start alongside Shearer.

That was Keegan's thrust: the fact that an innocuous match against a once mighty team that has taken its place among the alsorans of Europe could provide a springboard for a young player who might not otherwise havehad the chance. He did not snipe at the respective club managers for withdrawing their players. "Every manager has played ball with me," he said. "They have all asked whether they wanted the injured player to come down for a medical, but what is the point of asking someone to sit in a car for seven hours just so I can prove what his manager has already told me? I don't see the worth in antagonising managers. We have to work in tandem for the good of the league and for the England nation-

for those such as Shearer, who were desperate to play for their country whatever the occasion. We will still have the nucleus of a good team," Keegan said, "and now it will be sprinkled with a bit of stardust. We will still take something from this game. A few of these young players are going to get on the plane home as full inter-

They could make a fantastic impression, others may turn in a perrmance where they don't let themselves down, others may offer signs it has come too quickly for them. That's down to them, not me. I can only provide them with the chance. Certain withdrawals have been a blow to us, but we go, we play and we will send out a team with plenty of youth and enthusiasm. Alan Shearer is captain and he will respond to that, but I am more interested in how the young player making his debut up front along-side him responds to playing with Alan. The presence of the captain is important, but it was never in any doubt. Alan is not a prima donna He wants to play in every game and I can relate to that.

"I told him I wanted to play, to get me on the plane. It was an England game. Yes, some games are bigger than others at this level, but you have got to have the right attitude for every England match.

World Cup organisers have faith in security

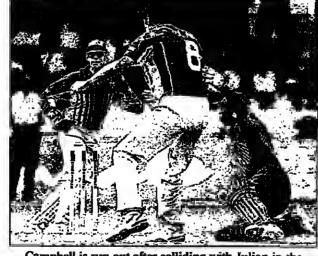

By RICHARD HOBSON

SECURITY measures due to be implemented for the cricket World Cup will not be tightened in response to crowd trou-ble in the Caribbean. Michael Browning, the event manager, said that plans already in place will prevent a repeat of the frightening scenes in Guyana and Barbados over the past week that tarnished the one-day series between

West Indies and Australia. The International Cricket Council (ICC) is awaiting reports from Raman Subba Row, the match referee, but has already pledged to investigate disturbances that threatened the safety of players. Even John Howard, the Prime Minister of Australia. felt compelled to join a chorus of condemnation yeslerday. Steve Waugh described as "pure luck" the fact that no one was seriously injured when bottles rained on to the outfield in the latest incident in Bridgetown on Sunday night. "It is only a matter of time before somebody is killed." the Australia captain said. "You cannot risk blokes' safety for a game of cricket."

Organisers of the World Cup have held regular meetings over the past two years with the Association of Chief Police Officers and equivalent organisations in Scotland,

Forest puzzle as Evans denies applying for job

By Stephen Wood

NOTTINGHAM Forest yeslerday confirmed that Roy Evans, the former Liverpool manager, was one of "three or four candidates hoping to become the oext manager at the City Ground. Last night, however, Evans insisted that he had not shown any interest in the post.

Forest, who were relegated from the FA Carling Premiership after their defeat away to Aston Villa last weekend, need to make a new managerial appointment this summer. Ron Atkinson, the present manager, announced his retirement last Saturday, to take effect from the end of the season. Yesterday lunchtime a spokesman for Forest indicated that Evans could become Atkinson's successor and the club's fourth manager since Brian Clough ended

18-year reign in 1993. "Roy is in the frame for the job and is one of three or four candidates," the club spokesman said. Evans, who was believed to have applied for the vacancy in January this year after Dave Bassett, Atkinson's predecessor, was sacked, but, later yesterday, denied that he had sent an application to Forest. However, Evans has been looking to return to management since he left his job as the joint-manager of Liverpool last Novem-

Evanswas a candidate to fill the manager's vacancy at Blackburn Rovers, which went to Brian Kidd, but even if he does not put himself forward for the Forest post. there are other candidates to take cootrol of the team in the Nationwide League first division next season. Sammy McIlroy, the Macelesticid manager, is under consideration after taking the Moss Rose club from nonleague football to the second division. David Moyes, the Preston North End manager. there are suggestions that Forest could opt for a managerial combination of Stuart Pearce and Nigel Clough, two of their former players. Pearce is still on the playing staff of Newcastle United. while Clough is player-manager of Burton Albion, the Dr Martens League club. initially refused to comment
